Irony? You want to talk irony?

* the kooktards that believe Obama's birth certificate is a fraud...thus implying they know more than the Wall Street Journal's investigative reporters.

* the kooktards that think bin Laden is still alive...even though Al-Qaeda says he's dead.

And here's a couple that really peg the ol' Irony Meter:

* Sarah Palin telling Obama to release the pictures and "finish the job". "Finish the job" coming from the Palin that QUIT her office mid-term? She has the nerve to tell others to "Finish the job"?

* the kooktards that want to give Bush credit for killing bin Laden. Yes, the very same George W. Bush that DISBANDED the CIA's bin Laden task force in '04 or '05.

Yup, plenty of irony to go around! LOL!

He should get a job in the public service, then he'd see there's no way the government could pull off something like 911. It takes them half a year to make a decision. At my work we are talking about July 2012!

Bin Laden Lived To Fight Another Day—Thanks To Bill Clinton

When President Barack Obama made the historic announcement in the White House East Room about the killing of Osama bin Laden, the air was thick with irony. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton was there, and her husband's notorious narcissism and cavalier attitude about governance had allowed bin Laden to escape—in 1998, three years before the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon.

In his stunning 2003 book Dereliction of Duty, Air Force Lt. Col. Robert "Buzz" Patterson, a presidential aide and carrier of the "nuclear football," describes President Clinton's gross irresponsibility toward national security. Patterson tells how, in the fall of 1998, the watch officer in the White House Situation Room notified the president's national security adviser, Sandy Berger, that they had located bin Laden and had "a two-hour window to strike."

Here is Patterson's chilling account:

Berger ambled down the stairwell and entered the Sit[uation] Room. He picked up the phone at one of the busy controller consoles and called the president. Amazingly, President Clinton was not available. Berger tried again and again. Bin Laden was within striking distance. The window of opportunity was closing fast. The plan of attack was set and the Tomahawk [missile] crews were ready. For about an hour Berger couldn't get the commander in chief on the line. Though the president was always accompanied by military aides and the Secret Service, he was somehow unavailable. Berger stalked the Sit Room, anxious and impatient.

Patterson continues:

Finally, the president accepted Berger's call. There was discussion, there were pauses — and no decision. The president wanted to talk with his secretaries of Defense and State. He wanted to study the issue further. Berger was forced to wait. The clock was ticking. The president eventually called back. He was still indecisive. He wanted more discussion. Berger alternated between phone calls and watching the clock.

The dithering continued until it was too late—and bin Laden lived to fight another day. And to plot the Sept. 11 attacks.

That was not an isolated incident. On Sept. 13, 1996, while on the golf course with his lawyer friend Vernon Jordan, President Clinton had refused to take repeated urgent phone calls from Berger, who needed the president's approval for air strikes on Iraq. Patterson wrote: "Pilots were in the cockpits, waiting to launch, targets were identified, everything was in place, all [Berger] needed was the go-ahead."

He never got it. The protective cover of night lifted, and the mission was aborted.

There were other examples of gross and inexcusable incompetence. President Clinton twice managed to lose the nuclear codes that were necessary to activate the nation's nuclear arsenal.

Just as we will never forget Sept. 11, we should not forget the dereliction of duty by President Clinton and those who were his enablers.

The Road to Tyranny begins with the Destruction of the Truth

Really? How exactly do you determine they were first responder and not the Really? Please present your evidence they are first responders and NOT firemen who were regularly on the scene after the cleanup operations began.

Since you have no idea of who I am, much less my professional knowledge and experience, I can only assume this is your conspiracy theorist stupidity talking here.

Quite loud actually since you will require several cutting charges each one containing a rather large volume of high explosive. Not going to be very quiet when you detonate and you would probably be rattling windows in NJ from the concussion.

Actually they will cut whatever needs to be cut. Which can even include support columns.

I've certainly not heard of them using "nap gas". I've seen them use propane, acetylene, LPG and even MAPP, but never heard or seen of "nap gas" being used.

They depended on your stupity to overlook the missile and they were Actually "MAPP gas", but I would have taken "map gas" as well since some people just know what it's called not it's actual acronym. In any case since I included MAPP gas in my listing of common cutting torch fuels used in demolition, I think I've already shown my knowledge of the subject. Far more than someone that once again invents some "nap gas" nonsense. Heck, I even gave him a chance to claim it was just a typo, but then he repeated his mistake. Doesn't look like a typo now, just utter ignorance and enough stupidity not to buy a clue when given a rather clear hint.

Hell, I wish he could just provide conclusive irrefutable PROOF of a single specific detail that is clearly contrary to both the official conclusions and reasonable natural events that could have resulted from the airliner impact.

Since he has been unable to do so even in a single particular, then it doesn't matter how much he puts out there, the proof of his claims are clearly inadequate to support those assertions.

yes he was. In fact he is the FIRST and ONLY president in our entire histpory as a nation to prove he was born on US soil by releasing his birth certificate. Case is closed.

Yes, he is, not in dispute. I cannot even be questioned. It is proven historical FACT that you cannot refute.

Yes, he is and will win his second term, and maybe a third if Hillary isn't running.

It is self-refuting. Hawaii has spoken, and that's ipso facto, insane nut job. Once Hawaii speaks, it's over. It is not even possible for it to be a forgery.

You mean the issue was settled for anyone without any intelligence of morality. Your tinfoil helmet is slipping.
You seriously need to get a real job. One day your bosses will cut you loose (they have no use for "useful idiots" born without brains) and you'll reap what you sown. I think a restraining order keeping your libel off the internet would be a good start. Don't you know that contray to the solid belief of all you loons, internet posting does NOT cure insanity!

Sorry there sham-shill it IS in dispute! And it certainly CAN be questioned! Just how insane are you? You aren't even writing logical English! Just saying he's "natural born" over and over and pointing to some photoshopped piece of crap as some kind of irrefutable proof is looney. It's political. It's lies. It's propaganda. It may fool all the idiots posting here but doesn't fool me! You are wearing the tin-foil hat here.

But of course, the TRUE test of Obama's eligibility to be president has to do with whether he is enough of a politician to cover up his birth status for AT LEAST 8 years. Like you say, who give a shit if he follows the rules? The constitution is null and void now anyway. So you are probably quite right that he may run for a third term. I mean, hey, if the "natural born" part of the constitution doesn't apply anymore, why should we worry about some johnny-come-lately thing like the the XXII Amendment? You are not only insane, but treasonously criminal as well.

Sorry but no, it isn't. It is not even possible to dispute it. By definition, ipso facto, it is settled once Hawaii speaks. It did so twice now. Case is closed. Barack Who Slain Osama IS the FIRST and ONLY US president to document his eligibility with his birth certificate, not in dispute.

Sorry, dearie, but what i am pointing to is HAWAII's certification. It's proven fact. The very act of Hawaii certificating that Obama was born there SETTLES it for all time. Not in dispute. The US Constitution REQUIRES that you accept this and STFU.

Cover up? Are you nerts? He's done the OPPOSITE. He put TWO official birth certificates online. One was enough and MORE than ANY PREVIOUS PRESIDENT in history had ever done.

Obama UPHELD the Constitution by PROVING his eligibility even though not required, while your America-hating rightards SHIT on it.

There has always been that truth and quite a few realize it but why hasn't your National Socialist government officials been tried for war crimes thus far?

Do you think there is a chance they will allow such a thing?

The only salution ia another rebelion but since your guns have been taken away from you it is like putting David up against Goliath.This time Goliath is heavily armed and you only have the sling shot!

I tried to represent a better America when I was president.
But now I don't have to...

Which is why he authorized wiretapping Princess Diana while declaring Mohammed Atta Hands-off and now molests one of his own students in a World-Wide photo-op with the caption: Priceless Lessons in Leadership !!!

Bill Clinton does (and did) precisely what Bill Clinton wanted to do. PERIOD.
He said as much, Hillary went further by telling us she did it because it was where the FUN begins.

What Clinton Didn't Do . . .
. . . .and when he didn't do it.

.... let us examine Mr. Clinton's war on terror. Some 38 days after he was sworn in, al Qaeda attacked the World Trade Center. He did not visit the twin towers that year, even though four days after the attack he was just across the Hudson River in New Jersey, talking about job training. He made no attempt to rally the public against terrorism. His only public speech on the bombing was a few paragraphs inserted into a radio address mostly devoted to an economic stimulus package. Those stray paragraphs were limited to reassuring the public and thanking the rescuers, the kinds of things governors say after hurricanes. He did not even vow to bring the bombers to justice. Instead, he turned the first terrorist attack on American soil over to the FBI.

In his Fox interview, Mr. Clinton said "no one knew that al Qaeda existed" in October 1993, during the tragic events in Somalia. But his national security adviser, Tony Lake, told me that he first learned of bin Laden "sometime in 1993," when he was thought of as a terror financier. U.S. Army Capt. James Francis Yacone, a black hawk squadron commander in Somalia, later testified that radio intercepts of enemy mortar crews firing at Americans were in Arabic, not Somali, suggesting the work of bin Laden's agents (who spoke Arabic), not warlord Farah Aideed's men (who did not). CIA and DIA reports also placed al Qaeda operatives in Somalia at the time.

By the end of Mr. Clinton's first year, al Qaeda had apparently attacked twice. The attacks would continue for every one of the Clinton years.

• In 1994, Khalid Sheikh Mohammed (who would later plan the 9/11 attacks) launched "Operation Bojinka" to down 11 U.S. planes simultaneously over the Pacific. A sharp-eyed Filipina police officer foiled the plot. The sole American response: increased law-enforcement cooperation with the Philippines.

• In 1995, al Qaeda detonated a 220-pound car bomb outside the Office of Program Manager in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, killing five Americans and wounding 60 more. The FBI was sent in.

• In 1996, al Qaeda bombed the barracks of American pilots patrolling the "no-fly zones" over Iraq, killing 19. Again, the FBI responded.

• In 1997, al Qaeda consolidated its position in Afghanistan and bin Laden repeatedly declared war on the U.S. In February, bin Laden told an Arab TV network: "If someone can kill an American soldier, it is better than wasting time on other matters." No response from the Clinton administration.

• In 1998, al Qaeda simultaneously bombed U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, killing 224, including 12 U.S. diplomats. Mr. Clinton ordered cruise-missile strikes on Afghanistan and Sudan in response. Here Mr. Clinton's critics are wrong: The president was right to retaliate when America was attacked, irrespective of the Monica Lewinsky case.

Still, "Operation Infinite Reach" was weakened by Clintonian compromise. The State Department feared that Pakistan might spot the American missiles in its air space and misinterpret it as an Indian attack. So Mr. Clinton told Gen. Joe Ralston, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to notify Pakistan's army minutes before the Tomahawks passed over Pakistan. Given Pakistan's links to jihadis at the time, it is not surprising that bin Laden was tipped off, fleeing some 45 minutes before the missiles arrived.

• In 1999, the Clinton administration disrupted al Qaeda's Millennium plots, a series of bombings stretching from Amman to Los Angeles. This shining success was mostly the work of Richard Clarke, a NSC senior director who forced agencies to work together. But the Millennium approach was shortlived. Over Mr. Clarke's objections, policy reverted to the status quo.

• In January 2000, al Qaeda tried and failed to attack the U.S.S. The Sullivans off Yemen. (Their boat sank before they could reach their target.) But in October 2000, an al Qaeda bomb ripped a hole in the hull of the U.S.S. Cole, killing 17 sailors and wounding another 39.

When Mr. Clarke presented a plan to launch a massive cruise missile strike on al Qaeda and Taliban facilities in Afghanistan, the Clinton cabinet voted against it. After the meeting, a State Department counterterrorism official, Michael Sheehan, sought out Mr. Clarke. Both told me that they were stunned. Mr. Sheehan asked Mr. Clarke: "What's it going to take to get them to hit al Qaeda in Afghanistan? Does al Qaeda have to attack the Pentagon?"

There is much more to Mr. Clinton's record--how Predator drones, which spotted bin Laden three times in 1999 and 2000, were grounded by bureaucratic infighting; how a petty dispute with an Arizona senator stopped the CIA from hiring more Arabic translators. While it is easy to look back in hindsight and blame Bill Clinton, the full scale and nature of the terrorist threat was not widely appreciated until 9/11. Still: Bill Clinton did not fully grasp that he was at war. Nor did he intuit that war requires overcoming bureaucratic objections and a democracy's natural reluctance to use force. That is a hard lesson. But it is better to learn it from studying the Clinton years than reliving them.

This is Clinton's Bridge to the 21st Century.

Monica kept saying she felt like she was having a relationship with a lost little boy. This is the President of the United States. She was an intern. Yet she felt maternal in her relationship with him.

Yeah so how could Bush keep something as sophisticated as 911 a secret? If it really was a conspiracy there would be at least one smoking gun, but there's none. Ziltch, zero (well Bush did know Binladen wanted to attack but I am unclear what he did with that knowledge)

Mr. Smith,

I have no inkling of your age; therefore, I do not know from what perspective you are proffering your opinion. Be that as it may, recording the history of war and what takes place in front line of a conflict has changed dramatically in the last decade or so. Now the military and its presidents are able to see an operation such as the Navy Seals engagement at the bi Laden compound in Abbottabad, Pakistan, in real time.

One matter to consider before making an opinion about why there was a blackout for some 40 minutes, give or take. Any time a signal is sent out from a scene source of a military action, in this case, the cameras on the helmets on the Seals special operations, the signal has the potential of being intercepted by other groups of combatants. Rest assured, the whole affair was taped at the mission's military unit in the field. To suggest some faked operation would be both unwise and making the conspiracy-minded folks carry on and on.

What the well trained Navy Seals can do at a minimum in any operation in the cool-headed, without clouding the mind with nervous emotions, would have many good men peeing their pants. To complete an assignment, Seals don't shake, they just do it! Be proud of them.

In time, the photos and tapes will be seen. Be patient.

DCI .

So, you have already jumped to the conclusion that they are lying, again! Yeah, I think them damn liars too ...

And, again, it will just keep getting better as the false flag operations, false documents, lies, dumped body of osama, etc. keep piling up around this administration and the negro crook and his ghetto gang in the whitehouse!

Wonderful ... suddenly America is a banana republic with public servants competing with criminals in 3rd world countries for whose behaviors are the rankest ...

It makes me look forward to tomorrow and what new weirdness that will bring ... you say they will eventually come up with a tape, after they have claimed there is none ... well, at least we are used to that little game -- we have seen that with the obama birth certificate. I guess that little trademark will be a tool of this president till we are finally rid of this stinking arse ...

Knowing that someone wants to attack is far different from knowing what someone wants to attack, where, when and with what.

Imagine I said "I'm going to send someone to get you fergo!"

What would you do? How would you prevent it? Don't forget, I'm living in luxury

We certainly know why they were in a hurry to dispose of that body! These rabid public servants of ours have gone dangerous to citizens on a worldwide level.

I'd wager that Camping gets a new revelation on May 20th saying that G'sus

It is obama money!!! And, grab your non-existent free health care while you are at it!

And, the magic negro will do it cheap! Just give him every last dollar left in your wallet and it is yours -- barring some unforseen circumstance or event -- and it is possible that might happen -- and it does seem to happen just about every other day ... etc.

Somewhere, along the line of all this happening, even the religious fanatics worshiping at the "Throne of the Magic Negro" are going to wake up and get PISSED!

Worse than that, if property prices hadn't dropped to the point where you can purchase a home with the change in your pocket, I'd take out a forty-year mortgage, JUST THE DAY BEFORE!

:-) :-) :-)

All kidding, I can take a look at the complexities and problems with having life "spontaneously generate" and, instead of a leap of faith into such, I choose to leap in the direction of a mind having made a creation(s) and left evidence in its' existence ... :-)

Let me put my statement in perspective:

Matthew 24:36, King James Bible:

"But of that day and hour knoweth no [man], no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only."

Now, he sets his knowledge above his Gods'.

I mean ... that is beyond rational description ... unless his bible is one I am not familiar with.

You fell for the action of a troll.
1) Take a thread that has morphed into something else. (This gives you a subject)
2) Take a message from that thread and reply to it (this adds the the 'somebody wrote')
3) Delete all but a statement posted by someone else.
4) Add his own spin which is unrelated all of the above.
5) Post it to a bunch of groups unrelated to the original thread.

Super Turtle is probably not hroedrank and neither are the MIT Scientist.

If you look at he original thread, you'll see a lot of ignorant arguments.

I don't consider anything JS posts to be relevant.

You are generally unimpressed with anything that resembles sound reasoning. Joe is right. You are, at your core, just an idiot troll.

I have never seen documented idiots and morons like you represent.

You constantly seem to have to state your opinions, revelations, spiritually generated premonitions and visions, etc. And, the personal attack is the most used weapon in your toolbox ...

Why you can't stand in a 3rd party mode and look at yourself and recognize the insanity you elude in your text and fantasies is a wonder to behold ... if a learned trait, or a genetic defect, who knows?

A few days ago, a next door neighbor woman who lives next door to me, she said she left her back door unlocked and somebody went into her house and stold her computer.She asked me if I had seen anybody in her back yard.I told her like it is, I haden't seen anybody in her back yard.I can't be sitting around outside all the time watching over their houses.
Last year I installed burglar bars on all of the windows of my house and I fixed up a 'locking thingy' so nobody can come into my house through my back door.This year I am going to fix up something for my front door, something much better than a regular door lock.Home security is up to the people who live in their homes.

So predictable

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/John_F._Kennedy_assassination_conspiracy_theories#E._Howard_Hunt
A 2007 article published in Rolling Stone magazine revealed deathbed confessions by Hunt to his son which suggested a conspiracy to kill JFK orchestrated by Lyndon Johnson, CIA agents Cord Meyer, Bill Harvey and David Sï¿½nchez Morales, as well as a "French gunman" who purportedly shot at Kennedy from the grassy knoll.[89]

Here's the part where you say the confession isn't real...

You buy your groceries/food somewhere, there is a water supply to your house, there is someway to introduce toxins into these and the atmosphere in the home/compound ... etc.

I would think a single person likely to accomplish great damage, at most a handful.

I have always found, where there is a will, there is a way ...

Of course, if I have access to a nuclear bomb, I could just take out the whole city you are living in! Excellent likelihood of success there!

Ah, but I had no intention of leaving my compound. My operatives where already living in Germany and the US.

Your bombing of my compound would be as useful as your predecessors (Clinton) bombing of my compound. It achieved... nothing.

I liked the guy, years ago, who wired up a shotgun to the locked door of his cabin ... trouble was, the court found fault with the "security measure" and thew him into prison, when it "effectively stopped the burglar."

However, I'll just bet that ended a burglary spree, which otherwise would have kept on for sometime ... hard telling just how many people benefited from that one single individuals "anti-theft device!"

The new burglar bars are very safe, and have devices which cannot be triggered from outside the home, but allow immediate release from inside.

You are going to find out, the "cops" are no longer employed to protect you or to recover your stolen property. They are now revenue generators with good PR skills. They will come out, take a report and pictures, hold your hand while you cry, they promptly go about their business of generating income for the city/county/state ...

Except look at his response to me what I addressed his use of "nap gas" and even included the proper designation in my reply and he told me I didn't know what I was talking about because anyone with any professional knowledge knows of "nap gas". Yea, he REPEATED his error. Hard to claim it's just a "typo" when you do the exact same thing in two different messages, particularly when you ignore the correct designation given and claim the person was wrong.

So use it once, and accept being corrected, and I would buy "typo". Use it, be corrected, tell them they don't know what they are talking about, and use it again.....he's just ignorant and stupid since he didn't buy the clue.

I have been thinking about that. If you told me you were going to kill me, or do me great bodily harm, I would tell you to go ahead, but there would be consequences.

If I saw you in my home with a knife, or a gun, those consequences would immediately progress ...

What is so different about the concept of protecting oneself as opposed to protecting ones' country?

Politicians do what they do, and that's lie. You have to take everything they say as a lie until proven otherwise.

Who is Vincent Bugliosi, the young might ask?

He is the prosecutor who prosecuted Charles Manson, and wrote the book Helter Skelter, about the murders -- Tate-LaBianca.

Now, he turns his attention on a matter which just does not sit right on his soul -- the mass murders of George W. Bush. He wants JUSTICE!

Here he speaks on his book:

Some where between 50 to 150 Reported Burglaries per Conviction So on average for each Year that a Burglar Spends Behind Bars {In-Jail} that is 50 to 150 Victims they did not create.

That's 1-3 Burglaries per Week by someone doing Burglary as their 'Job' for Income. The most often 'quoted' number is 136 Burglaries per Conviction

NOTE : Over Half of all Residential Burglaries are attributed to Illegal Drug Users; and Illegal Drug Users account for ~2/3rds of the Violent Burglaries where someone is Injured a/o Killed.

However, Legalizing 'Street' Drugs is not thought to help 'cut' the number Burglaries; because the Use of Street Drugs Adversely Impacts Employability {Holding Down a Regular Job} So They Still Have To Steal To Live and Buy {Lower Cost} Legal 'Street' Drugs.

Actually it has been argued that Legalizing 'Street' Drugs entails several steps to Bring Down Crime :
1st - Legalizing 'Street' Drugs and Lower Their Cost to the Users.
2nd - Register the Users of Legalizing 'Street' Drugs
3rd - Place Register the Users of Legalizing 'Street' Drugs on Temporary/Permanent Disability with Limited Medical Treatment {DNR Due To Drug ODs}
-result- Give Them All : The Full-Time Job of Abusing and Kill Themselves and Reduce Long Term Costs
* Eliminate Their Need to Steal To Live and Buy Drugs * Eliminate Their Victimization of Other Citizens and
* Eliminate The Cost to Those Victims
* Eliminate The Costly Need To Warehouse Them In-Jail
* More Cost Efficient for Society Them What We Are Doing Now Victimization Cost and Prison Costs 136 Victims at ~$1800 Burglary = $245K Plus One Year in Prison at $47K : Totals Present Cost $292K -versus-
Legalizing 'Street' Drugs & Disability Costs ~$30K
That's a Potential Savings of $262K per Drugie ~90%
+ Close Down 18% of the {Empty} Prisons : Due to fewer Illegal {Street} Drug Crimes and Criminals In-Jail.
+ Reduce Police Staffing and Cost by 18% : Due to fewer Illegal {Street} Drug Crimes and Arrests
+ Reduce Criminal Court Staffing and Cost by 18% : Due to fewer Illegal {Street} Drug Crimes and Trials
-note- Some claim that the Number could be as High as 50% Reductions within a Decade or two.

Legalizing drugs would cause crime to plummet, that is self-evident.

Cocaine, heroine, etc. could be farmed and sold as cheaply as sugar. A bag of the concentrated product could get a whole city intoxicated for a few bucks ...

When you see the newspapers, they are full of crimes committed to obtain drugs. Robbery, burglary, shootings, knifing, all over pennies worth of actual drug.

Frankly, let others worry about the drug addicts getting employment. I am worried about the wife, children and friends -- and myself -- losing their lives over the poor bastards trying to get a few pennies worth of drugs and intoxicate themselves ... GIVE IT TO 'EM!

And, even worse than death can occur, a friend of mine is now in a self imposed imprisonment in his own house, his wife left him decades ago ... it was all over a drug addict in his house, burglarizing it, and attempting to get a few bucks for some drugs -- when he shot my friend, point blank in the face with an old military .45 -- blowing half his face off. The wife and I are two of his very few visitors ... reconstructive surgery could only do so much, back then, and he can't afford more now ... that, my friend, is REAL CRIME!

I have no time for arguments to make drugs illegal and keep that chit going on. I am sure if you researched today, you could find that same type of damage left from these insane laws. Trouble is, main scream news never shows you the years, decades and lifetimes of grief bad laws can cause ... offer 'em drug rehabilitation, but if that want 'em, give 'em the drugs until they are no longer a problem!

I'll bet there are a lot more stories like that, nobody usually mentions 'em!

JS

Dave,
-wrt- We have half a million years of climate data in Antarctic ice

Critical 'Climate Change' Factor # 1 = The Sun
Major 'Climate Change' Factor # 2 = The Earth {Itself}

-oops- another inconvenient 'climate change' truth

OK - Dave so that would be 500K Years -versus- 1K

-oops- another inconvenient 'climate change' reality

What Do Those 'Other' 499K Years Show : Lots of

* Real Hot Spells {not just Warming; but "Hot"}
* Real Cold Spells {not just Cool; but "Ice Ages"}

That's Naturally Evolving as in a Living Planet :

Dave even the Obama-Regime No Longer Calls the Decade/Century Long-Term Changing Weather Pattern
"Global Warming" -a-la- Al Gore -but- Simple "Climate

-oops- another inconvenient 'climate change' truth

Question #1 : In the Next Century or two will "Climate Change" make the Earth WARMER : So that Russia and Canada the 'Tropics' with most of the Rest of the World basically Too Hot! and un-live-able ?

+ Plus Rising Sea Levels due to Less Ice

Question #2 : In the Next Century or two will "Climate Change" make the Earth COLDER : So that only the Equatorial 'Tropics' are Liveable with most of the Rest

Either Way Man-Kind {Humanity} Must Adapt To Survive

Worse yet, if I get in a fist fight and lose, and the other guy threw the first punch, the other guy will, most likely, just get a slap on the hand, if I should attempt charges.

Yet, if a screaming queen jumps me, attempts to rip my eyes out, and I slap it to the ground and stomp it, I would, most likely, be charged with a HATE CRIME.

So, in addition to the race card failing me, the damn hate crime law isn't applicable to me!

I don't think this is the America the forefathers had pictured for the future ...

You're free to try fulfilling my challenge there John. Joe tried and failed miserably, so much so I don't even bother to read him anymore.

So here you go John, if you care to step up to the plate and take a swing.

Present your best proof for a single specific detail which you feel conclusively proves that both the official findings are wrong and which can not be reasonably explained or expected as a the natural results of the impact, fire, or other damage known to have occurred.

Certainly with everything you have there is some specific piece detail that you can conclusive prove supports your claims and can't possibly be explained by anything else normal or natural to known events.

Please note: I expect exact specifics backed by irrefutable proof. I am not going to search around looking for something you claim might be there somewhere, but rather I expect you to present me with a complete, concise and direct set of facts and proofs. Just as I would get in a set of engineering calculations, mathematical proofs, or scientific reports.

As near as I can tell, one which is getting close to the "original" would be the dead sea scrolls.

http://www.centuryone.com/25dssfacts.html

"10. The Scrolls are for the most part, written in Hebrew, but there are many written in Aramaic. Aramaic was the common language of the Jews of Palestine for the last two centuries B.C. and of the first two centuries A.D. The discovery of the Scrolls has greatly enhanced our knowledge of these two languages. In addition, there are a few texts written in Greek. "

I would say you make the exact mistake which the narrow minded make on any given subject.

You think yourself to know, things which you cannot possibly know, yet, with the present state of knowledge.

Any race which would visit us and suggest they where "GODS", and were but a few thousand years ahead of us, 5,000 - 10,000, would be entirely able to convince us they were "GODS" -- their technology would simply allow them to do all the things which "GODS" do.

I see the possibility that where it would be possible for a race to be a billion years ahead of us, give or take.

And, the inception, the creation, the very first living organism, even if single celled, requires so many factors, and so many extremely complex design considerations, to have all come together all within a very time critical period, and in such an exactly defined technical arrangement and order, as too virtually, at least in our present state of understanding, be strongly suggestive that some form of higher intelligence was involved in our design and creation.

And, if I am correct in my analysis, Einstein was an agnostic -- he simply knew he didn't know enough, yet ...

You went with the wrong card. You can't play the race card, but you're a lock to play the mentally ill card. No problem there. You can also go with the "kook" card, claiming to just be "eccentric", but that only works out if you have a lot of money.

Wild speculation?

What part? That the SR-71 was designed and built in the 1950s.

That most scientists, back then, were unaware that such technology had actually went beyond theory and had been implemented and was in use?

That an analogy of this, being made to suggest what is most likely occurring today, is in error?

Funny, I think it all either absolute fact, or highly probably and based in reality!

Well, even if you're right about all that -- and you may be -- that doesn't change the fact that the small fraction of the thousands of crazy Middle Eastern miracle books that the dominant sect chose as "canonical" are about as likely to be uniquely inspired by God as are the collected works of the Amazing Kreskin.

I also wonder about it. At one point he was convicted IN ISRAEL, but the Israeli Supreme Court overturned his conviction because it thought he was likely a victim of mistaken identity. If the Israeli court refused to uphold his conviction, then I really wonder how compelling the evidence could have been in this most recent trial.

Yeah, I guess my thought might be is that many people were 'there' in an attempt to 'serve their country' and I cannot fault them for doing so.

My original comment concerned the article, and the feeling that prosecutors said he was there (at Sobibor) without proof he had actually done anything wrong and therefore guilty simply on the basis of 'being there'.

I am not supporting Nazi's, nor supporting any ideals of the Nazi regime.

I think you're playing fast and loose with the word "theory" here. The SR-71 was more a feat of engineering than theory.

>That an analogy of this, being made to suggest what is most likely
>occurring today, is in error?

How do you know what is likely occurring today? Based on what evidence?

I was thinking along the lines of "So, you think the CIA can project a hologram in a clear sky with no medium to project it on"

Do you have any evidence to suggest that this can be done, or is this, again, speculation? And quite frankly, which is a more likely explanation? That airplanes were used, or holograms? What happens if the hologram equipment fails in mid-attack, and the plane just vanishes?

>Funny, I think it all either absolute fact, or highly probably and based

Again, based on evidence, or speculation?

Remember before the 1970's when price controls where in effect, prices remained stable and inflation was 0%?

Grandmas' and grandpas' retirement would carry them to their end days, leaving enough for an inheritance to family and friends?

That is what inflation is all about, stealing from grandma and grandpa to pay the new workers, so the rich/elite/tax-sheltered don't have to contribute!

No one can, for an ABSOLUTE CERTAINTY, however, the military ALWAYS will only declassify superior technology when the have something better ... Janes (www.janes.com) is a good site to research this on. Or, any sites which have an overview of historic military technology.

If two "invisible" laser beams intersect each other, at a point, the frequency of the resulting light can be in the humanly visible spectrum.

Ever see the glass cubes with the "etchings of objects" in the interior? This is the result of two laser beams, each of which passes the glass without harming it. However, where the two beams cross/intersect, a "fracturing" of the glass results at that small point. Tightly controlled and manipulated, the "etching" is drawn ... visible "pictures" can be drawn in the plain atmosphere using the same method, with the two "invisible" beams already mentioned. This is done very rapidly, but then, so is a picture "painted" on a TV picture tube, it works quite nicely, since the human eye/brain is so slow in processing ...

Yes, if the beams cease to quit rapidly redrawing the "picture" in the atmosphere, the picture ceases to exist. And the above applies ...

The first thing the Levantine god said was "Let there be light".
The first thing Aryan Gaia said was :"Oooops!"

The Levantine god is dead because like a stone, he does not change.
Gaia is alive because like all live, She is evolving. She does not really know what She had in mind at the start when She emerged out of primordial Chaos, and has been winging it ever since.

That we are here is an accident, but we've been making do and growing up, and now its time to put away childish visions of a father god.

Whatever intelligence that/would has/have "emerged out of primordial chaos" is God, DUH. Unless God has a mate, which he, she, or anyone else, for that matter, has not mentioned, any application of he/she would be meaningless, at least to myself.

Accidents only happen when humans are involved ... undoubtedly, the universe is unfolding just as it should in a way of "proper and good" which is above our judgment, intervention and manipulation.

I don't believe "evolution", in the grand scheme of things, is a stand alone item, rather just a designed function of the grand design.

Whenever you see a pile of rocks, it is impossible to determine if nature or man has piled those rocks.

However, when you see a pile of rocks which look like, and serves all the functions of a castle, you can damn well be certain it is man made ... so does God leave such signatures ...

I don't think so. Phony and a scam is the example of the carbon tax, all real scientific data exposes it as manipulated data. However, turned into a political football, with scare tactics applied, the morons support it with all the validity of picking a football team and supporting it ...

Reproducible scientific data is real ... even though, one may feel

You've provided no evidence at all, just speculation. And very silly speculation at that. For your next trick, please investigate whether Once to 297 PPM 300,000 years ago. Still nowhere near what we have today.

Report Stresses Urgency of Action on Climate
By LESLIE KAUFMAN

The nationï¿½s scientific establishment issued a stark warning to the American public on Thursday: Not only is global warming real, but the effects are already becoming serious and the need has become ï¿½pressingï¿½ for a strong national policy to limit emissions of heat-trapping gases.

The report, by the National Research Council, an arm of the National Academy of Sciences, did not endorse any specific legislative approach, but it did say that attaching some kind of price to emissions of carbon dioxide, the main greenhouse gas, would ideally be an essential component of any plan.

ï¿½The risks associated with doing business as usual are a much greater concern than the risks associated with engaging in ambitious but measured response efforts,ï¿½ the report concludes. ï¿½This is because many aspects of an ï¿½overly ambitiousï¿½ policy response could be reversed or otherwise addressed, if needed, through subsequent policy change, whereas adverse changes in the climate system are much more difficult (indeed, on the time scale of our lifetimes, may be impossible) to ï¿½undo.ï¿½ ï¿½

The report, ï¿½Americaï¿½s Climate Choices,ï¿½ was ordered by Congress several years ago to offer ï¿½action-oriented adviceï¿½ on how the nation should be reacting to the potential consequences of climate change.

But the answer comes at a time when efforts to adopt a climate-change policy have stalled in Washington, with many of the Republicans who control the House expressing open skepticism about the science of climate change. Other legislators, including some Democrats, worry that any new law would translate into higher energy prices and hurt the economy.

Not only is the science behind the climate-change forecast solid, the report found, but the risks to future generations from further inaction are profound. Already, the report noted, sea level is rising in many American towns and the average United States air temperature has increased by two degrees in the last 50 years.

The reportï¿½s authors ï¿½ an unusual combination of climate scientists, businessmen and politicians ï¿½ said they were very aware that the political mood on climate change had changed significantly from when the committee was formed in 2009. Because the report was also about policy advice, the council named nonscientists, including Jim Geringer, a conservative Republican and a former governor of Wyoming.

Albert Carnesale, the chairman of the panel and a chancellor emeritus of the University of California, Los Angeles, said that he hoped the paneli¿½s diversity and that many came to the job without i¿½prior biasi¿½ would help sell it even to skeptical policy makers.

i¿½It is an urgent problem to turn to, and what wei¿½ve done differently is to look at this as a risk management problem,i¿½ Dr. Carnesale said.

While no one knows the exact shape of the risks, Dr. Carnesale said, we know that they are real enough to act on. And that they will be harder to act on as time passes. i¿½We doni¿½t know exactly when the tsunami will hit or how high it will be, but we know it is coming, and we should prepare,i¿½ Dr. Carnesale said.

But Representative Joe L. Barton, Republican of Texas, who has been leading the charge against further regulating carbon emissions, swiftly dismissed the councili¿½s findings in an interview Thursday. i¿½I see nothing substantive in this report that adds to the knowledge base necessary to make an informed decision about what steps i¿½ if any i¿½ should be taken to address climate change,i¿½ Mr. Barton said.

Although the report characterizes climate change as a problem that urgently needs attention, it stops short of making highly specific policy prescriptions, leaving that to lawmakers.

To many worried about climate change, that is a common flaw of such reports.

i¿½This is the classic problem i¿½ the divide between scientific reality and political courage,i¿½ said Paul W. Bledsoe, a senior adviser with the Bipartisan Policy Center who has worked in Congress and with the White House on these issues. i¿½The scientific organizations are reluctant to advocate detailed policy prescriptions, while political actors are tentative about the scientific realities.i¿½

The report outlined four areas that demanded immediate action by the federal government.

For starters, it emphasized that reducing carbon emissions was critical to keeping the United States from having to make dire choices in the future. While stopping just short of recommending a carbon tax, the committee did praise its efficacy.

i¿½Analyses suggest that the best way to amplify and accelerate such efforts, and to minimize overall costs (for any given national emissions reduction target), is with a comprehensive, nationally uniform, increasing price oni¿½ carbon emissions enough to i¿½drive major investments in energy efficiency and low-carbon technologies,i¿½ the report said.

It also called on the federal government to play a much more active role in researching new technologies and in helping the nation adapt to the changes in the natural world that are already inevitable. Even with a reduction in carbon output, the report said, some climate change will continue to occur.

It noted that while many of the nationsï¿½ cities and states are taking steps toward mitigating carbon output and preparing for hotter, wetter conditions, it suggested that the federal government could help coordinate these activities while also encouraging more research and development.

ï¿½The federal government,ï¿½ the report said, ï¿½should immediately undertake the development of a national adaptation strategy and build durable institutions to implement that strategy and improve it over time.ï¿½ Finally, while this report was designed, in contrast to the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, to be by Americans for Americans, the authors noted that climate change was a global problem and the nation had an obligation to remain engaged with the international community on possible solutions.

Just keep in mind, you are speaking to someone, here, who actually thinks the inside job involved criminal elements of our government finding, funding, training and implementing the inside job with foreign radicals which were inducted to do the job.

Although speculation on how it could have been accomplished with other means is interesting, and I would hope a valid investigation even delves into this, just to establish reality over all aspects of the inside job, I tend to allow for real planes/drones/etc. hitting the building ... all the interesting evidence and proofs which exist are not based on whether a physical flying object struct the WTC buildings or not (and of course NO PLANE ever struck building 7 which fell just like the twin towers.)

9/11 stands as an inside job no matter what. So, naturally, the planes are of interest to a subset of all those whose interests center around 9/11.

SUMMARY: Any discussions just focusing on the planes is too limited and misses the real physical proofs ...

That tape, while done in stunning "Hollywood Style", with backdrops and props from a movie studio, is only as good as the evidence which is actually presented. Obviously, that is not a video forensics lab where real videos are given real analysis ...

The expert is rather unclear on exactly which tape he is analyzing.

Here is one of tapes I am referring to:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=19eVwHAbmRI&feature=related

I'd say something is wrong. Perhaps the "expert" using facial recognition was slipped a tape which is not in dispute?

Here is a discussion of the tape, centered around the CIA fraud:

Undoubtedly, your researching abilities once you blow off the dust and

Good history, good reminder of just how dangerous, criminal and treasonous this government is ... JFKs death was a government coup of our public servants ... we have not had a valid USA president since.

Much of what you say is true.

But price controls don't stop inflation. They just prevent businesses from compensating for inflation. Under price controls, Grandmoms and Grandpops AND business owners are victims of theft by the bankers. And the idea that Big Brother should control the prices of private transactions is anathema to anyone who treasures freedom.

Inflation is not "an increase in prices." Inflation _causes_ an increase in prices.

Inflation is a relative increase of the money supply. That increase can only be caused by 1) government, 2) banks, or 3) counterfeiters.

There should be no inflation. There is no reason whatever that the dollar could not be a fixed and honest measure, like the mile or the ounce or the minute.

The real reason it is not an honest measure is because bankers and vote-buying politicians like to create money out of thin air. _That_ is inflation. That is what steals the savings of the thrifty and forces us to work our entire lives to pay usury to the bankers, who have a license to create money out of nothing and do _nothing_ productive to earn their huge profits.

Read C.H. Douglas, _Social Credit_, if you want to understand what is really going on.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Yes. I don't claim to know, but I think that there is a strong possibility that that mind may only exist in the part of timespace that we call the future.

And I also think there is a distinct possibility that events in the future can determine events in the past -- that timespace folds back upon itself, like a variation of Nietzsche's eternal recurrence, or, as our ancestors believed, time is cyclical.

With my very best,

Yes. I see you having complete trouble with anything which does not support your opinion.

As I pointed out, and you skipped over, it is only the analysis and the evidence in the video which is of importance.

As I said, your investigation will turn up enough material to keep you busy for days, if not weeks ... once you actually start the investigation ...

But, get ready for the new faked videos of his death at the compound, in Pakistan, locals are already saying it is not bin laden in the video and asking about the "disappeared body." Roughly just what Americans are finding fault with ... getting better and better!

In my area, the central valley of California, he is going to have to run on 18%+ (most likely, in reality ~25%) unemployment figures, that 9% is not even close to being accurate, and probably NOT ACCURATE ANYWHERE in the usa!

The governments unemployment figures ONLY take into account those who are DRAWING UNEMPLOYMENT CHECKS -- once the checks run out, you are no longer considered unemployed!

Nice way to keep accurate figures ... ROFLOL

There was a time, back in the 1970's or so, when just if you registered with the unemployment office, looking for work, you were counted as unemployed. When the unemployment figures started to climb too high, only those drawing checks were started to be counted ... this problem has been with us a long, long time ... another instance of the "frog in the pan of boiling water."

Price controls would never be effective if applied to American goods.

The controls would be enacted as tariffs on foreign goods to employ Americans making American products.

The price controls would be on taxes, and eliminating/stopping them, as well as government fees/licenses/fines/charges/etc.

The price controls would be regulations on government, banking, wall street, etc. Since all of businesses costs would become stable, business would only be called out on the rug when it raised the cost of its' products ...

You don't attempt to capture the swine once it has escaped the barn, you enact good controls on the barn so the swine can't escape.

Anything less ends up just being, "Steal the wealth from the old to pay for the carrots to hang before the young."

JS

I'm not an economist, but inflation seems to me a fact of life in a market economy. The price of almost everything goes up over time, not just in the U.S. but in every country on earth. Bankers and politicians can't "create money out of thin air," as much as they'd like to.

Actually, that statement is correct, in a strange way.

Banksters and wall street don't created "money", they create debt.
Worthless dollars are printed as IOUs to pay that debt.

The final "payment" is extracted in flesh from the peasant populations who, through their sweat and sacrifice, actually create forms of products/services, of value, which pay for the created debt.

Nice scam, if you can find idiots to play it with you, and you are NOT AMONGST THE PEASANTS!

I always thought it was bizarre for "government" to attempt to make plants against the law -- extremely processed products of plants -- it could be argued, and effectively to me, to make them illegal, such as pure cocaine.

To attempt to outlaw plants which were here since the beginning, and can be argued to have been given to all men, just as inalienable rights, by the creator is bizarre -- in the least.

Drafts of the Constitution were made on hemp paper. I have heard discussions claiming the forefathers were smoking hemp and drinking while drafting the Constitution -- but who can know.

However, from evidence already proving, present politicians imbibe in drugs an alcohol, so why should it have been happening in the past be so far fetched?

Strangely, I am not sure I have ever seen any Tulips growing in Missy Sippy.That is not to say Tulips will not grow around here, ergo I am very sure they will.Almost every thing else grows very Good in Missy Sippy.I have no doubt some people in Missy Sippy DO grow some Tulips. Lets me check, I am sure Tulip seeds/plants are sold in the stores around here.Maybe I will ask Garden Mama.

You are exaggerating again. I asked one time, and then i stated my opinion based on what i observed with my own eyes, provided my reasons

No, pretty much on time Bruce. We have had troubles in past years with the tulips coming up sooner, but this year, they are pretty much on time.

Tonight, at a local venue, both B.J. Thomas and Gary Puckett of the Union Gap will both be putting on shows.

No, actually, the tulips this year are pretty much on time.

Tonight, B.J. Thomas and Gary Puckett (rhymes with...) are both having separate shows at the same venue.

The original Aryan cosmology had it that Chaos was primordial. But eventually, inevitably, what we call a 'self replicating sequence', Gaia emerged. But because replication is not perfect, She evolved to the point of reaching sentience and then differentiating Herself from Chaos and Maya (the physical universe).

Life forms that give birth without male fertilization are parthenogenic mothers. Which is why Gaia is female. And why Athena was in the Parthenon.

What passes for reality is made up of Fractal algorithms, a combination of the laws of Mother Nature and random chaotic input.

I also wonder about it. At one point he was convicted IN ISRAEL, but the Israeli Supreme Court overturned his conviction because it thought he was likely a victim of mistaken identity. If the Israeli court refused to uphold his conviction, then I really wonder how compelling the evidence could have been in this most recent trial.

The guy's so old at this point, he's probably happy to have the guarantee of "3 hots and a cot" as well as free medical care for the next five years.

The Jewish defense league is the driving force behind all these cases and they will hound the poor sob until he dead !

As the fellow is demonstrating what facial recognition software finds in the video, he invites you to do the analysis yourself -- trust but verify, if you will ... As soon as you do, you will have something to

Yes this part.
Not only scientists but the scientifically literate public knew the general capability of technology then, just as they do now. There were people who payed no attention to science who would have been astonished by the technology, just as there were those who believed, even back then that the government had technnology for time travel and teleportation; but people who kept up with technological theories knew pretty well what was possible then, just as they do now.

You are a fool, where the two beams strike each other (overlap), a visible frequency of light can be created, with the proper manipulations of the two beams, and where they over lap, a picture can be painted ...

Forget phosphor, the TV screen was only used as an example of a beam painting a picture, in real time, with the eye too slow to detect ...

Not a coherant picture in open air.
Not with current technology.
Not even with technology for which current theory exists.
A perfectly diffused mist or fog is required.
Even then, projection is possible only over short distance and in relatively small scale.

You must have a medium (not air) in or on which to "paint"; and it can only be done in limited scale at near distance.

You either play by the rules all the time, hold high standards, all the time, etc.

If not, there is suddenly no difference between "the good guy" and "the bad guy", and, this is exactly how our public servants and the illegal government they have replaced the peoples' will and vote with has become, "Public Enemy No. 1."

We need to end this ...

You either play by the rules all the time, hold high standards, all the time, etc. or you lose.

If not, there is suddenly no difference between "the good guy" and "the bad guy", and, this is exactly how our public servants and the illegal government, which they have replaced the peoples' will and vote with, has become, "Public Enemy No. 1."

We need to end this ...

If you ever go the the Netherlands (Holland) during spring, visit "de

That is full of everything related to Tulips (and other bulb plants),

Sounds good! Hope you enjoy it -- it may take your mind off the fact that your wonderful Michigan Repub governor is going to tax one of your pensions...and give it as a gift to Business. ("Shared" sacrifice, remember?)

But hey, if you or your fellow pensioners get "buyer's regret", maybe you can sign his recall petition.

Propagation Forecast Bulletin 19 ARLP019
From Tad Cook, K7RA
Seattle, WA May 13, 2011
To all radio amateurs

SB PROP ARL ARLP019
ARLP019 Propagation de K7RA

As reported in the ARRL Letter, on Wednesday May 11 six sunspot groups were visible, but that number shrunk to two on Thursday. Daily sunspot numbers declined from 84 to 29 over those two days as well, but the average sunspot number for the reporting week (Thursday, May 5 through Wednesday, May 11) grew by nearly 7 points from last week to 74.6.

The latest forecast shows planetary A index of 10 for today, May 13, then 8 on May 14-16, 10 on May 17, 8 on May 18, and 5 on May 19-25. The next possibly big geomagnetic period is May 27, with a planetary A index of 22.

The same forecast predicts solar flux of 95 on May 13-14, 90 on May 15-19, and 110 on May 20-30.

Geophysical Institute Prague predicts quiet to unsettled conditions May 13, quiet May 14, quiet to unsettled May 15, unsettled May 16-18, and quiet to unsettled again on May 19.

On May 9 NASA released a slightly revised prediction for the peak of Cycle 24, placing it at a smoothed sunspot number of 69 in June 2013. But a month earlier the estimate had a peak of 62 in July 2013. Last month NASA was predicting this cycle as the weakest in 200 years, but the update places it as the weakest in the last century.

These are Zurich sunspot numbers, which are always quite a bit lower than the NOAA SESC numbers that we report here. The NOAA numbers show a peak at 90 around February through July 2013.

On May 10, Rol Anders, K3RA of Elkridge, Maryland wrote, "After a slow week or so, propagation has rebounded with extremely strong signals from Europe and Central Asia on 20 meters for several hours after their sunrise time. Many 30 and 40 dB over signals heard in Maryland. I think there have been a lot of tardy arrivals at work in EU and Central Asia as the hams have had difficulty pulling themselves away from such great conditions in the morning! Also, 17 meters has been very good in the evening with JAs and other Asian stations coming back to CQs 3 hours after sunset on the East Coast. 15 meters has been open to the Far East after sunset as well. Most interesting was working JQ1QKK short path on 20 meter phone at 3 pm his time, 2 AM east coast time!

"One 'trick' that I sometimes use to find openings is to look for 'analogous openings' at my latitude. If I can work a DX station close to my latitude at a certain time of the day, then it is likely that I'll be able to work stations at that latitude the same distance away in the other direction when my local time is the same as that first DX station's was. Perhaps this is best explained by an example: the latitudes of JA and EX/EY/EZ/YA are not too different from Maryland, and they are both roughly the same distance away from me. So, if JQ1QKK in the example above was working me at 3 pm his time (2 am my time), there should be an opening to the general EX/EY/EZ area from MD at 3 pm my time, 2 am EX/EY/EX time. This can be extended to other latitudes if you know what DX stations at your latitude are working. For instance, if I hear stations at my rough latitude (EA, I, SV, EX, JA) working a path, I should have that same path when my local time is the same as theirs was when they experienced those paths. Of course, my path will be to an entirely different part of the world."

Mark Bell, K3MSB of Airville, Pennsylvania wrote, "Had some nice 6M sporadic-E action here around May 3. Worked YV4DYJ in FK50 at 2253Z. Stations from LU were coming in quite strong the next two days."

N0JK reports from Kansas that on May 5 he worked LU4FW on 6 meters with a sporadic-E trans-equatorial link. It was at 2138z, and he was using an indoor dipole.

Rich Molinski, WB2KWF of Smithfield, Virginia reported from FM16qw that on May 2 he worked 9Y4D and YV4DYJ on 6 meters using 80 watts and a 3 element beam at 35 feet, with 5x3 reports each way. On May 6 he reported, "I was amazed at the propagation! It's nice to see 6m open up. Each night this week, 6 has been open to some degree."

Bob Elek, W3HKK in central Ohio reports an E-skip opening on May 5 on 6 meters. He reports, "A C6 was 59+20 and had half the US calling him on SSB. Then for the first time in my 55 year ham radio career: TE skip to Argentina! (Interestingly I had just finished reading the VHF column in CQ Magazine describing how May was the poorest month for TE skip and not to expect it.) Well, around dinner time in Ohio, on May 5th there it was. The 6M band literally teeming with Argentine stations, mostly on SSB, from 50.1 to 50.13 MHz. LU after LU working pile ups, calling CQ, and coming in between 5x3 to 5x9 (on my 5 el Yagi, 10 ft above my rear patio, equipped with the standard Armstrong rotator, and fed by an IC7600 100w rig).

"At 2125z I worked LW3EX on 50.101 CW, then at 2133 9Y4VUX on 50.100 CW, and then at 2200z LU9EEM on 50.120 SSB, all with sigs between 57 and 59! In between I tuned around for other countries and passed up on many LUs. Another local op worked the VP8 (Falkland Islands), and a couple spots showed one station in OA and CE coming through but I didn't hear them.

"So, in summary, a very telescopic opening via TE into Argentina lit up 6M, and when things quieted down at around 2230z, I left for dinner a little late but a very happy camper."

Roger Gibson, K4KLK of Raleigh, North Carolina (in FM05) reports, "Six was open all day May 5 to WI area and then FL. I was surprised to hear LU4FW FF97 on halo antenna in garage. I quickly turned antenna south then connected the 4 El Quad 20 feet up and got him on first call with 100 watts. Not many takers but signal was very strong 59+ more like F2 and no fading. Contact made on 50.125 SSB at 2200Z. He was in for several minutes."

Both K5LJ and N4ZQ wonder why it seems that most sunspots appear in the Sun's northern hemisphere so far in this cycle. I ran this by K9LA who says, "Hemispherical asymmetry of sunspots has been known and studied for quite a while. I don't think there's an air-tight explanation yet, but it is tied to the Sun's conveyor belt. So what's happening now is 'normal' in the sense that it's been seen before in other cycles." He noted that butterfly diagrams of Cycle 20 show this predominance toward the beginning of the cycle, around 1965.

Hello Cuhulin,

You are right. The official name is "Kingdom of the Netherlands" and Noord & Zuid Holland are provinces like Utrecht, Gelderland, Friesland, etc.

The problem is that the name "Holland" (for "the Netherlands") is used frequently, even in country abbreviations. In sailing (IOC country code), we were "HOL" (now "NED").

So when a product mentions "made in Holland" it can be manufactured everywhere in the Netherlands. Regarding Short Wave Radio, we have "Radio Nederland Wereldomroep (RNW)", that's fine.

More strange things: the parliament is located in The Hague, but the capital is Amsterdam.

With kind regards,

I don't need to convince people whose morality says no torture ever.

But for those who believe that National Security overrides morality -
I have the argument - which is pushed by people such as John McCain - that torture does not help our National Security, but in fact hurts it.

You seem to want to think Co2 is a big thing. Only, in the complete scheme of things, has Co2 never been so low. At twice the PPM it is not going to kill us or mankind. Plants will flourish, since plants feed all life, either directly, or by feeding the food sources which serve as food sources to other species ... it is a good thing.

Your time frame is only going back hundreds of years, in our realistic knowledge of it. Since the oldest civilization in existance (china), at this time, has only been in existence for ~5,000 years, no meaningful data can be had as to whether this is a normal cycle of the earth, or not -- no sufficient records were kept until recent times.

But then, it simply doesn't matter as far as the carbon tax goes. Paying taxes to the government has nothing to do with Co2 levels in the atmosphere. Indeed, if the example serves as any sort of predictor, the higher the taxes, the higher the Co2. ROFLOL

A real non-event ... we simply need to deal with the changes which the future brings ... this has always been true, this will always be true ...

Put simply, there are crimes against men, and there are crimes against humanity ... torture is against humanity. Its' evil permeates every level of evil with exists.

The fact that serial killers would pay you for the job of torturing those people it would committed on is a good indication of just how evil it is ...

It was a Regime-of-Terror and many Germans were Socialism (Fascism or Communism) in all of it's forms does not work.

Neither does capitalism work. They both lead to absolute rule by a government body or person. A mixed economy with elements of both type of economies is what will work in the long haul. The US and Europe have a mixed economy with socialism and capitalism. China also has a mixed economy though it's government has more control over political and social speech at the present.

The ADL is but one of many. Others are NAACP, SPLC, Americans United, Freedom From Religion Foundation, ACLU, Catholic League. Poorly representing their factions, they try and eliminate "hate speech" from society, impose their own religion (or lack thereof) on others, through the court system.

In addition, there are plenty of Jews, Blacks, Atheists, and Catholics who believe in freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and the right to practice (another) religion (in public), and the whole religion or ethnic group is held to blame by the already-prejudiced due to the group's supposed "official representative" status.

For example, to ignorant people the Catholic League turns my religion, which because of scandals has become a joke to non-Catholics, into the opinion of a single anti-free-speech jackass.

Let's start "combating hate" which spews from these groups and support the First Amendment instead.

Clifford Hugh Douglas's _Social Credit_ isn't about socialism.

It is about making the dollar an honest measure of value. It is about preventing the banks from monopolizing and profiting from the people's credit. In the process of solving these problems, it also makes income taxes unnecessary. It's worth reading.

With all good wishes,

It may not 'kill us', but what effects may it have? If an increase on CO2 causes a temperature rise that results in flooding major population areas would that be a problem to be worried about?

Plants will flourish, since plants feed > all life, either directly, or by feeding the food sources which serve as

If a climate change reduces the ability to grow those plants (rice, wheat, corn, etc.) that are a major food source, would that be a problem to worry about?

If the climate changes so that major agricultural areas can no longer produce the crops needed by civilization, would that be an issue to be worried about?

There is also no evidence to say the civilization can prosper if there is significant climate change.

So while you can say CO2 was much higher in the past, you choose to ignore the possibility that higher CO2 levels may cause problems that could be serious.

You should be able to find instances where folks thought adding small amounts of chemicals to the air or water was thought to be insignificant but later had to be dealt with at a major expense.

I'd rather err on the side of caution rather than have my head in the sand and find out the implications were much more serious.

No plan at the moment to cancel the parade unless severe thunderstorms threaten.

I think the parade kicks off at 2 PM EDT (1800 GMT). And from what I understand, whtc.com may also have steaming video.

One problem, RHF: her name isn't "Larnrod"; it's Iarnród, starts with an "I" (eye).

She's named herself after an Irish railroad network: Iarnród Éireann (Irish Rail). That's why I call her "Rude One" or "Rails." She's a member of the Denver Dykes on Bikes <ddob.org> and the Head Cheerleader of both the Obama COLB Cult and the Obama der Retter Cult.

She's a foul-mouthed Narcissistic Personality Disorder-afflicted Abderian Simpleton who readily edits whatever you post in order to falsely claim she "wins" every argument she's engaged in.

She's a Lying Left-Wing Liberal Socialist Democrat LOSER™ (est. 2010-11-02) KOOK: IOW; a typical Obamaniac; and always drunk on Long Island Iced Tea, which she swills and posts her enjoyment of being drunk on it.

How convenient of you to overlook the fact that your REPUBLICAN governor is personally taxing YOU (your pension). To add insult to injury, he is giving your pension tax as a -gift- to BUSINESS.

Finally, don't overlook that your guv lied; he said the whole point was to whittle down the deficit -- and not one nickel of your pension tax is going against the deficit, it's ALL going towards Business.

Trump would be more the same as obama, and bush. He would carry on the goals and push forward in the directions already established. He is a waterboy of the shadow government.

Banksters and wall street would still remain the vampires sucking the life out of Americans. The wars would still be raping nations for their resources, wealth and treasure.

Trump is like romney, palin, huckabee, obama, etc. -- simply no choice at all ...

The ADL has been in the forefront of efforts to

1. Disarm private citizens

2. Politicize the police and federal law enforcement

3. Promote political censorship of the Internet

Almost twenty years ago, I referred to them as "America's greatest enemy" in an essay:

http://www.gwb.com.au/2000/pc/bnai15.htm

Time has vindicated that choice of words.

Liberty Net: May 7, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/05/liberty-net-may-7-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET continued its free speech traditions this week, with ideas and debates sometimes intense ï¿½ and sometimes worthy of a modern-day School of Athens. If youï¿½d like to join in, get an amateur radio license ï¿½ theyï¿½re easier to obtain than ever before ï¿½ and add your voice to the check-ins.

Here are just a few examples of what you can hear on this weekï¿½s recording:

ï¿½ Police in some jurisdictions are seizing motoristsï¿½ cell telephones during random traffic stops ï¿½ and inspecting the personal data therein, all without a search warrant. Some freedom-minded citizens are responding by always carrying a throwaway phone that can be given up without giving up privacy. (6 minutes)

ï¿½ The Last Roundup, the radio program of N2SAG, one of the Liberty Netï¿½s leading participants, is now on 5110 kHz every Friday at 9PM Eastern (0100 UTC). (22 minutes)

ï¿½ Many are expressing astonishment at the Washington regimeï¿½s multiple versions of the death of Osama bin Laden. Why, for example, was the unarmed bin Laden not captured, which would have given his captors considerable leverage with his many thousands of followers? (24 minutes)

ï¿½ One wag has quipped that the only difference between Osama and Obama is the letters ï¿½BS.ï¿½ (37 minutes)

ï¿½ The Pakistani military obviously trusted Osama bin Laden enough to allow him to build his residence 1,000 yards from one of their bases. But did they trust him enough to sell or give him nuclear material? (1 hour 14 minutes)

ï¿½ Why has the lily-White elite of Mexico ï¿½ which is continually exporting its unwanted surplus Mestizo population to the US ï¿½ recently purchased over 100 tons of gold? (1 hour 30 minutes)

ï¿½ All Americans should be loyal to the spirit and letter of the original Constitution of the Founding Fathers. But we should give no loyalty whatsoever to the successor regime in Washington which only pretends to be a continuation of the long-defunct original government of the United States. (1 hour 48 minutes)

ï¿½ Did you know that the Washington regime is now sending assassination drones not only to Syria, Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Iraq ï¿½ but now also to Yemen? How many innocents must die as a result of these horrific murders ï¿½ how many good people must end up as radicalized enemies of America ï¿½ before these illegal wars and illegal murders are ended forever? (2 hours 57 minutes)

ï¿½ A new study has revealed that 47 per cent. of nearly all-Black Detroitï¿½s adult population is functionally illiterate. New Yorkï¿½s Mayor Bloomberg thinks the solution to Detroitï¿½s decline is to import millions more Third World immigrants and require them to live in Detroit for five to ten years. (3 hours 2 minutes)

Remember that you can find the Liberty Net on a clear frequency around 3950-4000 kHz LSB every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time, or you can listen live on the Internet via N2SAG or N2IRJ, or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week.

Thanks to W1WCR for running the Liberty Net, and thanks to N2IRJ and N2SAG for giving the net a great online presence.

No, you're wrong about that. They can. And they do.

We all know that government printing presses can create money.

But less well known -- although far more of a problem -- is the fact that the commercial banking system itself creates money every day.
In fact, the vast preponderance of the money supply was created _ex nihilo_ by the banks.

The basics of money-creation are very easy to understand (though powerful interests would prefer that you _not_ understand):

Say you deposit $1000 in a checking account at your bank.

Because of the Fed's "reserve requirements" rules, they can lend out about, say, 90% of your deposit, or $900. Say they decide to lend that $900 to Dave.

So they make a bookkeeping entry that Dave has $900 more in his checking account than he had before.

But -- and here's the crucial part -- do they deduct the $900 from your account? Do they even put a hold on $900 of your funds so that you have to wait until Dave pays back his loan until you can get that $900?

No, they don't.

So, where there was once $1000 on the books of the bank, now there is $1900. All fully available for withdrawal at any time.

And Dave must pay interest to the bank for the use of the money they created out of nothing.

Actually, it's even worse than that. The bank, or another bank if Dave chooses to deposit elsewhere, can continue the process -- lending out 90% of Dave's funds too. And so on, _ad infinitum_.

And that is how _most_ of the money is created under our system, which was created by the bankers, for the bankers, and to the eternal profit of the bankers.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

George Bernard Shaw looked at evolutionary history and the evolution of sex, and said that the female obviously invented the male for her own purposes.

I am not so sure that's literally true, but there is an insight there for those who can grasp it.

I think the way it happens is that below a certain size and below a certain minuscule time interval, space and time are not continuous. They are granular. In other words, there are irreducible steps with nothing in between them.

Therefore particles behave very differently in very small dimensions than they do otherwise. Their behavior cannot be individually predicted, just statistically.

Apply a force precisely calculated to move a particle from position 1 to position 2.5 -- but if there's _no such thing_ as position 2.5, and positions 2 and 3 are the only possibilities, what do you get? Particles that go to position 2 half of the time and position 3 the other half. (That's wildly simplified, but you get the idea.)

That _seems_ chaotic, and on those small scales perhaps it is.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

His footage was not doctored it caught lots of goodies that the CIA wanted to remain silent.It caught dumptrucks and cranes on standby,then they jumped on it with both feet claiming it to be faked,but it was the real deal.It caught the CIA agent in action projecting the hologram.That was not a cell phone in his hand!

After I pointed out to him you were a mere punkin,he decided you were a wastes of his time and so has you on hold till you complete your apprenticeship.

Well let me stand in for him just till he gets back hopefully we can get you ready for your exam by educating you on Mapp gas. Both tips for burning will fit in the same cutting torch head the acetylene tip is almost identical to the one used for Mapp gas.

For your home work assignment,provide the distinguishing difference in both tips and explain why the blow hole is recessed.

It will be on your test!

Yep, pretty much speaks for itself, the people charged with upholding the Constitution, Declaration of Independence, Bill of Rights, are the ones openly attempting to destroy the intent, spirit and law of the documents.

If that is not a demonstration of the collusion of the independent branches of government nothing is ... clearly, legislation from the bench!

I don't know what's more insane... that the government, especially the Judicial Branch, have decided that the Constitution is either exactly opposite of what it is supposed to be, or else to be used as any other "goddam piece of paper" (i.e. to wipe ones ass with), or that there seem to be a lot of people out there that are backing their play on it.

Godwin's Law be damned, those are Gestapo type tactics.

Examples of unconstitutional laws upheld by the SCOTUS: (You may or may not personally feel any of these are out of line, but they are nonetheless violations of the Bill of Rights of the US Constitution as it stands).

1) Restriction of ex-felons from owning firearms after having served their time. (Second Amendment violation, "the right of the people to keep and bear firearms shall not be infringed)

2) Setting up "free speech zones" where protesters are often kept in fenced in areas (First Amendment violation, ... or abridging freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right to peaceably assemble, and to petition the government for redress of grievances)

3) Denying the right to sue government agencies, etc. without specific permission (First Amendment violation, ... and to petition the government for redress of grievances.)

4) Allowing law enforcement to enter a home without a warrant based on an officer's "gut feeling" (Fourth Amendment violation)

5) Making law allowing for certain offenders to be held indefinitely after having served their full sentence. (Fifth Amendment violation, due process and double jeopardy clause)

6) Allowing the courts to assign excessive bail (or no bail at all) (Eighth Amendment violation, excessive bail)

7) Allowing prison inmates to be held under inhumane conditions (Eighth Amendment violation, cruel and unusual punishment. SCOTUS gets around this one now by stating that some forms of inhumane conditions may indeed be cruel, but are no longer UNUSUAL)

8) Allowing of warrantless wiretaps (Fourth Amendment violation, search and siezure) (Fifth Amendment violation, self incrimination, due process)

There are tons more examples, these are just ones that have been in the news recently. Some view these as "criminal rights" and some feel these violations are protecting society, etc., but either the law is the law, or it's not. Allowing wholesale violation of ANYONE's Constitutional rights affects us all... if they can do it to those we don't like, they can do the same to the rest of us, too.

Would that be the "nap gas" you claimed to know all about, and which you told me I was wrong even after I included MAPP as commonly used cutting gases?

Sorry, but I twit filtered you after you tried to present a rather stupid Youtube "proof" of someone that doesn't even understand the basic manner in which video is taken. You were stupider yet since you clearly didn't even recognize the flaws in your "proof". Seems that as long as there is some idiot claiming he has proof of the conspiracy, then that's good enough for you.

Apparently John isn't much different, but he felt he could present such proof despite his inability to provide such proofs in his prior attempts.

Sorry, but when you claimed it's "nap gas" and then tried to correct me when I use the proper term, it's a little late to claim you have a superior knowledge in this matter.

> What is that baby moron screaming about now?

Just pointing out the inability of any 9/11 conspiracy theorist to come forth with actual conclusive and irrefutable proof of even one specific detail of their claims.

Yes Brenda, I knew there was damn good reason I liked you ...

I am in agreement with all.

The law has always been, if a man owes a debt to society, he pays that debt (servers time in jail/prison) ALL of his rights are restored ... obviously, this is what the forefathers wanted! The rest all exhibit examples of the same error in reason and logic, which the courts are so willing to give ...

They said what they meant, and they meant what they said.

What part of the world are you located ? it is important ,due to very erratic propagation (the last 2-3 years) lately . Some frequencies are useless , most of the time . Solar Cycle 24 is not in a hurry to get here .

The Time Date Stamp on your Post Indicates the West Coast of the USA PST -800 / PDT -700

? So are you in the Western USA Time Zone ?

IF You are on the West Coast of the USA Try WWV [Colorado-East] and WWVH [Hawaii-West]
They are both on the same Frequencies and Transmit 24/7 on :
2500 kHz ~ 2.5 MHz
5000 kHz ~ 5 MHz
10,000 kHz ~ 10 MHz
15,000 kHz ~ 15 MHz
+ WWV {Only} 20,000 kHz ~ 20 MHz

WWVH [Hawaii] =West= has a Female Voice giving the Hour and Minute Time ID each Minute and is heard first before the Minute -followed-by-

WWV [Colorado] =East= has a Male Voice giving the Hour and Minute Time ID each Minute and is heard second before the Minute -followed-by-

The Top-of-the-Minute "00" Seconds 'Tone' {Beep}

-if- You Hear Both Voices for WWV and WWVH :
Then the Signals from both the East and West are 'good' for that range of Frequencies.
Tropical 2500 kHz WWV & WWVH = 120m 90m -nights-
Low 5000 kHz WWV & WWVH = 75m 60m 49m -nights-
Middle 10,000 kHz WWV & WWVH = 41m 31m 25m -24/7-High 15,000 kHz WWV & WWVH = 22m 19m 16m -days-High 20,000 kHz WWV = 13m 11m -days-

"m" = Shortwave [SW] 'Meter' Band

Kooky.

It seems, "Christians" have become little children who hide under the bed and wait for father to come home and save their little worthless arses from the big bad bogeyman ...

Obviously, if there is a God, he would be quite disgusted with them.

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

Of course you hate America when you insist that those

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Why did Roosevelt order the pacific fleet to relocate from the west coast to Hawaii in the summer of 1940? Why was the commander, Admiral Richardson, removed after complaining that Pearl Harbor didn't offer sufficient air or topedo defense?

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the

President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

Bush and Cheney didn't want their scapegoat to testify.

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the

President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US
between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling

that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

http://www.antiwar.com/justin/j080801.html

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

Or, simply put, the worst enemy of the American citizens is their own government, being ran by criminal public servants and courts.

Once any system is put into place where money and power resides, the crooks will always attempt to gain control. This is a no-brain-er, crooks simple do what crooks do.

American citizens have just grown lax and unused to emptying the trash. As the crooks get ever more bold, devious and vicious in their workings to maintain control, power and the theft of wealth, more and more Americans will grow tired, impoverished and desperate.

This will all culminate at a point where the proper actions are invoked and true and just order, the rule by the people, of the people, for the people, will be reestablished.

The waiting is always the most difficult part ...

IIRC the Family Radio's "Headquarters" are in the SF East Bay {Oakland, CA} between the Oakland Coliseum and the Airport

The KEAR-AM 610 kHz Transmitter is actually in Berkeley, CA {SF East Bay}

The Billboard is in SF* near the approach to the SF Bay Bridge.

No it is only an apprentice 1st year I'm sure that demands attention whether it is good or bad.It trys to present it's self as a journeyman in the fabricating field.So far all it has prooven is that it is a master at fabrication but does google and twit,should it's father restrict it's use of the cell phone it would have to go back to mowing lawns to buy its pig wormer.Children will be children and snorting ang smoking bathoil beads for a high is its only purpose for living! Do you realy think it knows how to filter out anything from its twat.It says it cant watch youtube videos because it has not been given the G-4 connection. Soo it is quarantined to the read only archives and tghis is flustrating because no kid wants to trade in its ability to text message for a labtop. I can picture it now with a laptop and a bluetooth and a MAPP cutting tip going from door to door trying to sell controlled demolitions to its classmates!

The SWL Antenna Weather Report : 15 MAYO 2011

This Morning by 4 AM we had 4~6 Inches of Snow on the Ground : Half-Inch of Snow on the Bare Copper Stranded Wire and Two Inches of Snow on the Multi-Stranded Wire.

About 8 AM the Wind came-up and blew most of the Snow Off-the-Wires. Still have plenty of Snow on the Trees and on the Ground; cause it's still in the low 30s.

We now expect an more Snow Tonight may be another 4~6+ Inches of Snow here in Beautiful {-:SUNNY:-} California :o)

Unfortunately, high altitude causes brain damage, possibly related to diminished oxygen levels! Once the damage occurs, the victim(s) remained trapped at the high elevation -- unable to think to escape!

Yeah, well, these criminal servants have filled their bank accounts to overfull with the "candy" they have stolen from childrens' futures, grandma, grandpa, the disabled, the retired, the poor, the working man, etc.

After having so much fun, for so long, me thinks it is time to end this

The old Vibroplex ''BUG'' Key I bought many years ago at Goodwill, according to the Patent numbers on the brass plate that is riveted to the heavy iron base, the Key dates back to at least the 1920s.There is another number which is stamped on the brass plate, it says, No.79483
And there is an old braided wire/cord which has a plug on the end of the cord.

And if you click on this website, http://www.mtechnologies.com/n1fn/keys.htm and scroll on down ten pictures, the Key the guy calls KOB ''Key On Board''
I also have a Key which looks exactly like that Key, but I think the wood base on my KOB Key is nicer looking, Maple wood, I think it is.I also bought that Key many years ago at Goodwill.

They dont even have to print it any more, just do like you said, change the numbers in the computers. But money is like any other commodity; if there's a lot of it around, then the benefit, in this case the interest or ROI, declines. So, digital money was used to buy stocks, and we see the price rise, but not the real earnings of the corporations relative to the money supply, so the PE ratio increased.

Murders/assassinations aren't preferable to trials, in civilization.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind every occasion its enemies attack it.

disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

You do have problems.

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

>...cannot NAME ONE...

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

So what's your excuse for your inability to insist on a valid trial for the most horrific crime of this millenium to date?

>kooker...

That is your best excuse.

>...Hates US

Of course you hate America when you insist that those who murder Americans should not be prosecuted
according to the rule of law.

Notice that you can't name one thing that would be admissible evidence against the scapegoat chosen
by your fascist masters.

>... run away again without NAMING ONE THING ...

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence

On Mon, 9 May 2011 05:03:39 -0700 (PDT), "Craves Fascist Iarnrod Up Gaping Ass"

<cricket.wav>

>... run away again ...

You always do.

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the

President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US
between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling

that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

You do have problems. That was already obvious.

The bushkultie has to pretend this never happened, too:

that took place on 9/11/2001 were responsible for national security when we had that most unlikely, unrealistic and implausible complete catastrophic failure of every single defense procedure in operation."

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the

President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US
between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling

that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

That type of logic usually only surrounds homosexuals, a reoccurring

TheNike Air Jordan has come on strong in the last few month
TheNike Air Jordan has come on strong in the last few months, combining the chukka shape and Torch technology. Though the Torch-constructed silhouette hasn¡¯t been around long, there has always been an innumerable amount of color-ups, including some inspired by the World Cup. This featured running shoe has no team affiliations, but might still be the perfect pair to throw on after a game of soccer, or track, or any other sport. The Nike Lunar Rejuven8 Mid+ running shoes rely on the standard Torch construction, and get help from a textile material on the mid-foot, heel and Swoosh. The shoe color-up is simple it relies on two shades of purple while the ever-comfortable and light Lunar sole is white.

Design and production, we have adopted a new aerodynamic concept and design of technology to achieve a breakthrough in speed and accuracy to compete. Feet in industrial areas represents a series of carbon fiber materials and the latest results, and further optimize the performance of the first type of dry fly.Nike Air Jordan

TheAir Force Oneretro style shoe was at the forefront of the sneakerhead craze during the earlier part of this decade. While the designs and colorways of the Nike SB Dunk were popular for its eccentricity, the Nike Air Force 1 built its backbone on simple yet meticulous color blocking. This retro lifestyle shoe uppers are constructed of clean white leather while metallic silver accents are put into use on areas such as the tongue tag, Nike swoosh, and the outsole. 3M material is added to the Nike swoosh to give it a nice shine in low light. Other features include a clean white midsole and a nylon tongue. This new white and metallic silver 3M pair looks like a throwback from the 80s; the unmistakeable all-white upper on top of the grey sole with a 3M reflective swoosh will have Air Force 1 sneakerheads nodding in approval.

When the conditions are decent, you should have good reception of Asia and Oceania . And,of course, WWV / WWVH operates around the clock at : 2.5, 5, 10 and 15 MHz . Again , propagation is horrendous at the present time .

Mike, I'm just 65 miles north of you near Fremont. Reception has been sort of crummy lately with rare exceptions (last two weeks) until tonight, when all sorts of goodies are out there on 19-22-25-31 meters. 41 and 49 were much better in winter, but still OK.

Once again, rightards go gay. Not a surprise, since they have nothing else to use in arguing with their betters!

1870. FS: National NC-88 receiver.

National NC-88 Receiver. General coverage from Broadcast through the HF bands.Very nice shape. Cosmetics good for a rig this age, as the pictures will attest (available on request). If there's anything in particular you'd like to see, speak up.

Works very well. Fresh alignment. Receives on all bands. Tubes all meet spec. Fairly common tubes, too, so replacements are readily available should the need arise down the road. This one has a very nice sound. Good sensitivity. Lots of gain. Antenna trim control for optimizing random wire antennae. Noise blanker, Variable BFO, and High/Low tone control. Any questions, do ask. Delivery within 100 miles of Chicago.

Thanks for looking. p

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and
disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence

So what's your excuse for your inability to insist on a valid trial for the most horrific crime of this millenium to date?

>kooker...

That is your best excuse.

>...Hates US

Of course you hate America when you insist that those who murder Americans should not be prosecuted
according to the rule of law.

Notice that you can't name one thing that would be admissible evidence against the scapegoat chosen
by your fascist masters.

The bushkultie has no admissible evidence, and doesn't even know what it is.

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their
offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ...

After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US
between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

D'OH ! ! ! -Dave How Does A 'Media Marketing Area' Translate into "The Frisco-San Jose-Oakland Area" =With=Respect=To= "Technical Culture"

1st : San Francisco {NOT Frisco}
Dave You Have NO Culture
?IF? You Call "San Francisco" : 'Frisco'
-thus-your-statement-has-'no'-value-Deleting both : 'Frisco' & 'culture'
-it-reads- "The San Jose-Oakland area has pretty much dominated the technical my whole life"

2nd : I Repeat Myself {When You Are Right You Are Right}
-rhf-right-on-!- -rhf-right-on-!-
Dave -fyi- 'Silicon Valley' is "Silicon Valley" the Center of All Things Hi-Tech [Technical]
{The South Bay : SR84W-to-SR84E} and Silicon Valley Ain't San Francisco [.]
SF is a Cesspool of Drugs, Crime, Sickness {Aids}, Big City Payola and Political Corruption.

Sorry I have slowed on the quantity of posts, however I have been busy.

Recently I found out bin laden was living in a cave on the outskirts of my city. So, me and a few good ole' buddies got a couple of six packs and went hunting. We found him. After, I put a bullet in his head; We brought the body back to my house. After killing the remaining beer we took a few pictures of burying him in an unmarked grave in my backyard.

I am afraid the pictures are just too much for those here, or American citizens, to handle. So, we decided, as a group, not to release the pictures. And, allowing the examination of the body, by others, is not necessary -- you know you can trust me :-)

No need to thank me ... I consider it just part of being a good American! As always, I will keep looking out for you and your best interests -- TRUST ME! <wolfish-grin>

Regards,
JS

P.S. It has been absolutely confirmed we got the right guy, as just to be sure, we preformed a DNA test in my garage. See, any possible questions/arguments/doubts are unnecessary ... go back to sleep knowing you are in good hands!

-and- Cause... It's "La Chica" closing as always with Three (3) "Good-Nights" around XX40 UTC of the Hour.
-but- Again "La Chica"s 'englanish' made it sound more like the Words 'Too-Nite' can be heard on 5883 kHz during 0700~0745 UTC

And, as always, don't let your children attend the Sullivan College of Technology & Design (Backwater U.).

They've hired at least one dufus who once claimed to have a PhD and lied about being arrested, and who knows, there may be more dufi there.

That's for The Last Roundup, of course, not the Liberty Net -- but, yes, that is what I was told. With WBCQ, though, things are always subject to change.

Last Saturday they were on 3993 kHz; the week before that 3983 kHz. The best clear frequency is picked by W1WCR at the last minute before the net begins. They're usually somewhere between 3950 and the top of the band.

Thar's voodoo magic in that "Magic Negros' Money!" "FREE" OBAMA MONEY!

But, just in case, I won't spend all my retirement and plan on obama

But, he is hitting on congress right now! Looks like they might just start up those presses for another go around and churn us up some "FREE" OBAMA MONEY! (I just love to say that "FREE" OBAMA MONEY!)

It's a study in treachery.

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind every occasion its enemies attack it.

"I would like to assure the world that I did not plan the recent attacks, which seems to have been planned by people for personal reasons,"

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and
disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their
offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

"...incompetence cannot explain the suppression of efforts to prevent the attacks."

The very people with established motives for conducting an event like the one that took place on 9/11/2001 were responsible for national security when we had that most unlikely, unrealistic and implausible complete catastrophic failure of every single defense procedure in operation."

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,

"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

"Sarah, if the American people had ever known the truth about what we Bushes have done to this nation, we would be chased down in the streets and lynched."

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to "Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

At that time of day, may be parallel to other ABC outlets that are much more audible. I hear ABC sports shows on the higher freqs that time of day often. Sports shows, like rugby or cricket, are an almost dead giveaway.

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and
disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

Of course you hate America when you insist that those

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their
offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
"MacArthur's views about the decision to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki were starkly different from what the general public supposed." He continues,
"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

If you had 1,000,000 USD in retirement savings during the gold rush, and talked about antennas until the adjacent QRM got too bad. He was

Yeah, we have nothing to fear but our public servants working in cahoots with the shadow government. We need to reach behind the puppets and grab the puppet masters, along with the sold out puppets and imprison or give 'em the death penalty, as is fitting ...

The main objective now is to wake up as many as possible to what is going on, and what HAS been going on for quite some time.

We are now stuck here until we get enough awake ... keep sharing the truth ... it will happen ...

That has been proven to be an impossible claim ... TWICE.

Hawaii proved Obama is a natural born citizen, making Obama the FIRST and ONLY presidential candidate in our nations history to DOCUMENT the proven fact that he was born on US soil. A claim McCain could not make.

Care to step up to the plate?

Pick your BEST piece of evidence concerning a specific detail that you assert PROVES the official report was wrong about and which can't be reasonably explained by known events but only as set forth by your conspiracy theory and present that proof.

Please note, The proof presented must be complete, concise, specific, and irrefutable. No having to go digging around looking up claims or trying to find out whether claims are correct. It must include any and all cites necessary to support any evidence included. Any and all assumptions made MUST be spelled out specifically at the start and it must be explained why these assumptions are reasonable to make. In short, I expect a complete package that PROVES your claims beyond any reasonable doubt.

Come on, I'm only asking you to prove any single specific element. Surely you can do that?

Batter up.

*personally, I expect you to either decline or strike out, because in my experience no "truther" has ever been able to conclusively prove even a single claim that shows their conspiracy theory has any merit at all.

That's quite an error:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

It's a study in treachery.

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

So what's your excuse for your inability to insist on a valid trial for the most horrific crime of this millenium to date?

That is your best excuse.

Of course you hate America when you insist that those who murder Americans should not be prosecuted
according to the rule of law.

Notice that you can't name one thing that would be

The bushkultie has no admissible evidence, and doesn't even know what it is.

You always do.

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their
offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

"...incompetence cannot explain the suppression of efforts to prevent the attacks."

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
"MacArthur's views about the decision to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki were starkly different from what the general public supposed." He continues,
"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

http://www.antiwar.com/justin/j080801.html

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

You certainly are. I told you exactly and specifically what was required and some opinion piece with vague references to unsupported assertions and claims just isn't going to cut it.

Either you don't realize what actually constitutes conclusive proof, or you simply don't have any. Either way, it does NOTHING to support your theories and tends to make them simply look like the result of crackpots to anyone trying to give you a chance to present your case.

Oh well, another 9/11 conspiracy nut shows again that they can't prove their assertions even with their best evidence on even one specific detail.

Think of an AM/MW Radio Station Single Tower 1/4WL
Antenna that is Down Sized for 2310 ~ 5025 kHz :

That's quite a glaring error:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

It's a study in treachery.

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
"MacArthur's views about the decision to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki were starkly different from what the general public supposed." He continues,
"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
"MacArthur's views about the decision to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki were starkly different from what the general public supposed." He continues,
"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

http://mindprod.com/politics/bush911insidejob.html

"Our analysis indicated the biggest problem would be the fact that all the fuel (from the airplane) would dump into the building. There would be a horrendous fire. A lot of people would be killed, ... The building structure would still be there."

http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/analysis/design.html

"An editorial in the respected trade magazine Fire Engineering states that there is good reason to believe that the "official investigation," blessed by FEMA, into the WTC collapse is a "half-baked farce" that may already have been commandeered by political forces whose primary interests are clearly not full disclosure. "Respected members of the fire protection engineering community are beginning to raise red flags, and a resonating theory has emerged: The structural damage from the planes and the explosive ignition of jet fuel in themselves were not enough to bring down the towers." [Fire Engineering, 1/02]"

http://www.wanttoknow.info/9-11cover-up10pg

"Leading structural engineers and fire-safety experts believe the investigation into the collapse of the WTC is "inadequate.ï¿½ They note that the current team of 20 or so investigators has inadequate financial and staff support, has been prevented from interviewing witnesses and from examining the disaster site. They couldnï¿½t even get detailed blueprints of the World Trade Center. The decision to rapidly recycle the steel beams from the WTC means definitive answers may never be known."

http://www.wanttoknow.info/9-11cover-up10pg

All undisputed ...

Still.

Of course.

And:

"According to Gert-Jan Knoops, a Dutch-based international law specialist, bin Laden should have been arrested and extradited to the United States and then put on trial."

This remains undisputed.

Not one contradictory fact has been presented.

The bushkultie isn't permitted to consider the facts.

Bush and Cheney are fascists, traitors, and war criminals, and electronic 'voting' will keep putting such into office.

If it's electronic, it's no election.

I'll bet you would go to any lengths to obfuscate the truth ... the moon landing, mom and pop, sunday school, the pacific ocean ... they have nothing to do with the proof that the NIST report is a sham ... it was limited and stopped from finding the truth by very powerful people ...

Now it is time for the truth ...

The NIST report has been blown to chit ... the free fall speed, the molten iron, the collapse into its' own footprint, the demolition experts, the lab results ... our government is being manipulated by dangerous criminals within a shadow government ... each and every day, more wake up to the real facts.

Gee, I couldn't have afforded obamas' private schools, back then. And, I was the norm, NOT the exception!

Obviously, MONEY, and REAL MONEY was behind obama -- why do you think he has enacted executive orders to seal all those records? Something is amiss!

People who talk about how capitalism works can't be happy about oil company subsidies. (nor any other kind of subsidies that distort the market).

And people who believe we shouldn't be dependent upon supplies from potential enemies can't be happy that we are subsidizing the industry that pays them so much.

But politicians need to remember who's paying them and do what their bosses tell them to do.

Your confusing the added footaged the CIA put in his documentary to make it look fake.Now their camera was most likely too sophisticated for them to operate or they to used a pocket cam!

Its' being there is an impossibility, unless someone placed it there, DUH!

"The problem here is that the nose cone of a Boeing 757 is made of carbon-fibre (like fibreglass); there is no metal nose cone on a 757. An average strength man (or strong woman) could make mincemeat of a 757 nose cone in about 15 minutes with nothing more than a light axe or a sledgehammer - the same cannot be said of the outer wall of the Pentagon. Punching through stone facade and 2 exterior concrete and brick walls, 4 or more interior poured concrete walls, and a poured concrete floor, to conveniently land front-and-center on a piece of board for photographers is out of the question."

FROM HERE:
http://911review.org/Wiki/PentagonAttackLegend.shtml

Here is a nose cone which has been damaged in flight:
http://www.p2pconsortium.com/index.php/topic/16284-northwest-jet-lands-in-tampa-with-dented-nose-cone/

Obviously, idiots attempted the fraud with that nose cone supposedly going though reinforced concrete! But then, look at the public servants, they have been chosen for puppets, not intelligence!

JS

Yeah, well, if he had won scholarships, fair and square, he wouldn't need to seal the records ... the information is there, and so is the evidence of the crime(s.)

Yes, that is an almost complete summary of how the crime is occurring, just in a bit of a cryptic form ... money talks and bull shit walks.

The crime is a well known one ... almost as old as prostitution, their "other" crime!

As always, the coverup shills and deniers of the 9/11 INSIDE JOB have no facts to present, so they resort in their frustration to childish ad-hominem attack.

NINE-ELEVEN - NEVER AGAIN!

To understand the point I wish to make, let's assume that an obviously alien creature was walking peacefully down the street, and observe peoples' reactions to it.

Some would simply not see it! Their brains would reject as IMPOSSIBLE what their eyes tell them, and block out their awareness of the unearthly creature.

Some might stare, perhaps be shocked or frightened, but then go on, rationalizing that they only saw someone in costume, or that they had indulged too heavily at last night's party and were seeing things. They would tell no one what they saw for fear of being called crazy. They would even, in defense of their own rationalization, label other people that reported such a sighting crazy. This is the psychological phenomenon of DENIAL.

Perhaps in fear for their own sanity, deniers condemn as crazy others that claim aliens or whatever to be real. Such assertions are frightening because they violate their sense of reality - "only KOOKS believe in aliens!" Thus people tend to reject as unreal what is not comfortable for them to accept, and likewise embrace beliefs that do not hold up to scientific scrutiny but do provide them comfort. You don't believe what you DON'T WANT to believe; denial thus serves to protect the mind from what would be mentally traumatic if accepted.

Some things are simply too horrific, too abominably appalling, too greatly in violation of what we WANT to think or believe, to accept as actual reality - even when they ARE real! "Look; the Emperor wears no clothes," said the child too na&#65533;ve to know that such facts are not to be spoken of, nor even acknowledged to oneself.

PSYOPS - definition paraphrased from Wikipedia: Psychological Operations. Techniques used to influence a target audience's value systems, beliefs, emotions, motives, reasoning, or behavior. PSYOPS are used to induce confessions or reinforce attitudes and behaviors favorable to the originator's objectives, and are sometimes combined with black operations or false flag tactics. The phrase is commonly used by governments who wish to avoid the terms propaganda and brainwashing in reference to their own work because those terms have negative connotations. The use of such euphemisms for what is in effect mind control is itself an example of psychological operations, i.e. using psychological techniques to persuade a large number of people to support something they wouldn't normally support or to unquestioningly accept lies.

Obviously, to permit or commit an atrocity on the scale of the 9/11 attacks, and/or to exploit the horror, shock, and fear thus created to influence public opinion and actions, is clearly a PSYOP. The exploitation of the psychological phenomenon of DENIAL is also clearly a PSYOP. Who would want to believe that traitors in our own government would permit, or even perpetrate, such an atrocity on their own people? How much easier it would be to accept the existence of aliens - or fanatical Jihadists!

"But, after all, it is the leaders of the country who determine the policy and it is always a simple matter to drag the people along, whether it is a democracy, or a fascist dictatorship, or a parliament, or a communist dictatorship. Voice or no voice, the people can always be brought to the bidding of the leaders. That is easy. All you have to do is tell them they are being attacked and then denounce the peacemakers for lack of patriotism and exposing the country to danger. It works the same in any country." - Hermann Goering at the Nuremberg Trials.

Now that we understand what PSYOPS are, and the psychological phenomenon of DENIAL, we are in a better position to rationally investigate the true nature and possible sources of the 9/11 attacks.

The UNDENIABLE EVIDENCE of an INSIDE JOB:

BLOWN TO BITS:

The sudden, complete, straight down at near free fall speed collapse of steel framed WTC building 7, which was not touched by the planes, is the SMOKING GUN of the 9/11 conspiracy. The building's minor fires and debris damage could not account for this collapse, which had all the earmarks of controlled demolition by explosives. Videos clearly show this. Such demolitions take many days or weeks to set up - not the few hours between the attacks and the collapse. The explosives therefore had to be put in place BEFOREHAND. This lends credibility to the use of previously placed explosives to bring down the towers as well, which like the badly damaged and fire-gutted Deutchbank building would probably have remained standing.

Propaganda shills, disinformationists, and those in psychological denial still insist the collapse of WTC 7 could not be what it obviously was, and they employ often ludicrous rationalizations and fabrications, elaborate lies, and infantile ad-hominem attacks to defend their indefensible position. The REAL terrorists are desperate to cover up their mass-murderous crime of the century - the permitting if not perpetration of, and subsequent political and economic exploitation of the fully preventable 9/11 disaster. Could Bin Laden have somehow totally incapacitated NORAD - the world's most sophisticated aerospace defense system - on that horrible morning? I don't think so!

There is evidence of an INSIDE JOB even more clear and indisputable than the explosive demolition collapse of building 7 and the standing down of NORAD. Many very small HUMAN BODY FRAGMENTS have been found on the roofs of nearby buildings. These were too far away to be from jumpers from the towers. If the towers simply collapsed from damage and fire alone, what blew these bodies to smithereens and sent the fragments flying for considerable distances? The plane impacts did not have the explosive brisance (shattering force) necessary to do this - only HIGH EXPLOSIVES can blow bodies to tiny bits and throw them such distances.

So - who can credibly account for these body fragments, other than their being the result of high explosives being detonated in the towers?

The following article proves, using the inviolate laws of physics, the falsity of the government's propaganda explanation for the building collapses:

SIMPLE PHYSICS EXPOSES THE BIG 9/11 LIE - GOVERNMENT BUILDING COLLAPSE EXPLANATION FAILS REALITY CHECK

On September 11, 2001, the world watched in horror as the World TradeCenter (WTC) Twin Towers collapsed, killing thousands of innocent people. Videos of the collapses were replayed ad nauseam on TV for days. About 5 hours after the towers fell, WTC building 7 also collapsed suddenly, completely, and straight down at near free-fall speed. This steel-framed building was not touched by the planes that struck the towers, and had sustained relatively minor debris damage and small fires. Nearby buildings far more heavily damaged remained standing.

In June 2005, in an apparent response to an article by Morgan Reynolds, former CIA Director and current Secretary of Defense Robert Gates stated, "The American people know what they saw with their own eyes on September11, 2001. To suggest any kind of government conspiracy in the events of that day goes beyond the pale."

We will prove here, with scientific rigor, that it's the government's tale that's "beyond the pale!"

Did most of the American people really understand the unprecedented phenomena they had witnessed? Could a lack of knowledge of physics, and the emotional shock of this mass-murderous "terrorist attack" have stymied objective thinking and led to the blind acceptance of authoritarian assertions?

The government and the media TOLD US what we saw. The government told us that we had witnessed a "gravitational" collapse; what is now referred to as a "pancake collapse". According to the government claims, the plane crashes and subsequent kerosene (like lamp oil - jet fuel is NOT exotic) fires heated the UL-certified structural steel to the point where it was significantly weakened, which is very difficult to believe, never mind repeat in an experiment. Even with massive fires that incinerate everything else, the steel frames of such buildings generally remain standing.

According to the "pancake theory", this purported (all physical evidence was quickly and illegally destroyed) weakening supposedly caused part of the tower to collapse downward onto the rest of the tower, which, we've been repeatedly told, somehow resulted in a chain reaction of the lower floors sequentially, one at a time, yielding to the weight falling from above.

There are some problems with that theory - it does not fit the observed facts

* It cannot account for the total failure of the immense vertical steelcore columns - as if they were there one moment and gone the next.

* The collapse times were near free-fall, far too rapid to be due to gravity alone. This article focuses on the latter of these two discrepancies.

Those that concocted the "pancake theory" made a fatal error - they didn't check their story against the inviolate laws of physics! This is easy to do, even without any physical evidence to examine. We can test that incredible pancake tale using basic high-school physics. Let's do that - use a simple, unassailable, incontrovertible conservation-of-energy analysis to perform a reality check that establishes once and for all that the government, and such government story backers as PBS, Popular Mechanics, and Scientific American have falsified the true nature of the 9/11 disaster.

How Gravity Acts:

Sir Isaac Newton noticed that apples fell from trees. Others had also noticed this, but none had ever devised a theory of gravity from the observation. Over the years, mankind has learned that the force ofgravity at and near Earth's surface produces an acceleration of known constant magnitude. That doesn't mean we know HOW it works, or WHY, but we have become able to predict its effects with a high degree of precision and certainty - gravity has always had the same, predictable, effect.

Galileo Galilei used the leaning tower of Pisa to demonstrate that a large ball and a small one (of lesser mass) fell (accelerated downward) at the same rate. Prior to Galileo, people had just assumed that heavier objects fall faster, much the way they had assumed the Earth was flat.

So while an object of greater mass will exert more force (its weight) upon anything supporting it against gravity's pull, it does not experience any greater acceleration when gravity's pull is not opposed - when it is falling. Earth's gravity at and near the surface of the planet can only accelerate objects downward at one known, constant rate: 32 feet persecond for each second of free fall. As Galileo demonstrated centuries ago, heavier objects are not accelerated any quicker than are lighter objects.

So Earth's gravity produces a downward acceleration of 32 feet per second per second. This means that an object, after falling one second, will be falling at a speed of 32 ft/sec. After the 2nd second, it will be falling at 64 ft/sec. After the 3rd second, it will be falling at 96 ft/sec., and so on.

Further, since gravity's acceleration is constant, and an object isfalling at 32 ft/sec after one second has elapsed, we know that it has averaged 16 ft/sec for the entire distance. Thus after one second, the object has fallen 16 feet.

Scientists have derived simple free-fall equations that can be used to harness this knowledge mathematically. These equations can be found inany high-school physics book

* Falling velocity = acceleration of gravity x time. (V = G x T)
And
* Distance fallen = 1/2 x acceleration of gravity x time squared. (D =1/2 x G x T x T)

So if we want to know how far an object has free-fallen after 3 seconds

Distance = 1/2 x 32 x 9 = 144 feet

So after 3 seconds in Earth's gravity, an object will have fallen 144 feet and will be falling at 96 ft/sec.

Checking Our Work:

We've just solved a simple physics problem. Now let's check our work,using conservation of energy.

We know that energy can neither be created nor destroyed - it merely changes form. If we take the potential (in this case chemical, molecular) energyin a barrel of oil and burn it, it changes to heat energy. When we burn gasoline in our car's engine, we get kinetic (motional) energy, plus some heat, as an engine is not 100% efficient. When we use our car's brakes to bleed off some of that kinetic energy (slow down), that energy isconverted into heat (the brakes get hot). Explosives convert potential energy [molecular or atomic] to kinetic energy (explosive force) quickly enough to shatter or even pulverize concrete.

In the case of the free-falling object, the two kinds of energy we are concerned with are kinetic energy and potential energy. Examples of potential (gravitational) energy are the energy available from water stored up high in a water tower, or a boulder perched atop a hill. If whateveris holding it up there is removed, it will fall under the influence of gravity's pull. As it accelerates downward, the potential energy is converted to the kinetic energy of the object's motion.

So, as an object falls, it changes its potential energy into kinetic energy.

The equation for potential energy is
* Potential Energy = Mass (or weight) x Gravity x Height. (PE = M x G xH)

The equation for kinetic energy is
* Kinetic Energy = 1/2 x Mass x Velocity squared. (KE = 1/2 x M x V x V)

So let's just say, for the sake of simplicity, that our falling object hasa mass of 1. (Remember, the object's mass will affect its energy, and its momentum, but not its rate of free-fall.)

The potential energy given up by falling 3 seconds (144 ft) is: 1 x 32x144 = 4608

The kinetic energy gained after falling 3 seconds is 1/2 x 1 x 96 squared =1/2 x 9216 = 4608

So, the available potential energy was converted into kinetic energy.Seeing that energy was, in fact, conserved is how we know that the answer in the simple case above was correct. We've checked our work, using an independent analysis, based upon the sound physical principle of conservation of energy. Now, and only now, we can be certain that our answer was correct.

One Little Complication - the effect of air resistance

The free-fall equations above reflect a perfect, frictionless world. They perfectly predict the behavior of falling bodies in a vacuum. In fact, you may have seen a science class demonstration in which the air is pumped out of a tube and then a feather will fall, in that vacuum, just as fast as will a solid metal ball.

That's how parachutes work: much of the falling object's potential energy gets expended doing the work of pushing a lot of air out of the way inorder for the object to fall. As a result, not all of the gravitational potential energy can go towards accelerating the object downward at gravity's rate of 32 ft/sec/sec.

In other words, only when there is zero frictional resistance can any falling object's potential energy be completely converted into kinetic energy. Anything that resists a falling object's downward velocity reduces its acceleration from the maximum gravitational acceleration of 32 feet per second per second, as some of gravity's potential energy is consumed in overcoming frictional resistance.

This explains the phenomena of "terminal velocity". The free-fall equations predict that a falling object's velocity will continue to increase without limit. But in air, once a falling object reaches a certain speed, its propensity to fall will be matched by the air's resistance to the fall.At that point the object will continue to fall, but its speed will no longer increase over time. Another way of looking at it is this: gravity's incessant force produces a downward acceleration, but friction with theair creates an upward force and thus an upward acceleration. When falling at terminal velocity, the acceleration downward equals the accelerationupward, they cancel each other out, and a constant downward velocity ismaintained.

Thus the parachute, with its high air friction resistance, allows theperson attached to it to float to earth unharmed.

A Quick Recap:

Earth's gravity causes objects to fall, and they fall according to precise physical equations. The equations assume no air or other resistance. Any resistance at all will cause the object to fall less rapidly than it would without that resistance. If a falling object is affected by airresistance it falls slower than it would if free-falling, and it will take longer to fall a given distance.

Free-fall From WTC Building Heights

The towers were 1350 and 1360 feet tall; average = 1355 feet. Let's start by using our free-fall equation to see how long it should take an objectto free-fall from the towers' height.

Distance = 1/2 x Gravity x Time squared. (D = 1/2 x G x T x T)

With a little basic algebra, we solve the equation for the fall time,T:

2 x Distance = Gravity x Time(squared) (2 x D = G x T x T)
Time squared = (2 x Distance) / Gravity (T x T = 2 x D / G)
Time squared = 2 x 1355 / 32 = 84.7 (T = square root of (2 x D / G))
Time = 9.2

So our equation tells us that it takes 9.2 seconds to free-fall to the ground from the height of the WTC towers.

Using our simpler equation, V = G x T, we can see that at 9.2 seconds, the free-falling object's velocity must be about 295 ft/sec, which is justover 200 mph.

But that can only occur IN A VACUUM.

Since the WTC was in Earth's atmosphere at sea level, you might be able to imagine how much air resistance that represents. Think about putting your arm out the window of a car moving even half that fast! Most free-falling objects reach their terminal velocity long before they reach 200 mph. For example, the terminal velocity of a free-falling human body is around 120 mph. The terminal velocity of a free-falling cat is around 60 mph.

Therefore, it is clear that air resistance alone will make it take longer than 9.2 seconds for anything falling from the towers' height to reach the ground.

Observations from 9/11:

On page 305 of the 9/11 Commission Report, we are told, in the government's "complete and final report" on 9/11, that the South Tower collapsed in 10 seconds. Here is the exact quote

"At 9:58:59, the South Tower collapsed in ten seconds". That's the government's official number. With all the videos that show it, they could not lie about this.

But as we've determined above, the FREE-FALL TIME IN A VACUUM is 9.2 seconds, and 10 seconds is an exceptionally short fall time through the air.

This "collapse" was not without far more physical resistance than from the air alone. It proceeded through all the lower stories of the tower. Those undamaged floors below the plane impact zone offered resistance thousands of times greater than that of air. Those lower stories, and the central steel core columns, had successfully supported the mass of the tower for 30 years despite hurricane-force winds and tremors. Air cannot do that.

Can anyone possibly imagine undamaged lower floors getting out of the way of the upper floors as gracefully and relatively without friction as air would? Can anyone possibly imagine the lower stories slowing the fall of the upper floors less than would, say, a parachute?

It is beyond the scope of the simple but uncontested physics here to tell you how long such a collapse should have taken. Would it have taken a minute? Ten minutes? Hard to say, but certainly it would take far more than 10 seconds!

What is certain, beyond any shadow of a doubt, is that the towers could not have collapsed gravitationally, through their intact lower stories, as rapidly as was observed on 9/11. Not even close. This is shown above to be physically impossible!

Not only was tremendous energy expended in causing the observed massive high-speed sideways debris ejections, but virtually all the concrete and glass of the tower was pulverized - actually dissociated is a better word. Never mind what happened to all the supporting steel core columns! The energy requirements to do anything like that, alone, rival the total amount of potential energy that the entire tower had to give. Gravity alone is sufficient to cause some things to fall that far, even through air, in close to the observed 10 second collapse time. But that is without the huge expenditure of energy necessary to pulverize all of that concrete and glass, eject debris, plus cause the steel core columns to effectively disappear. The gravitational potential energy present was certainly not enough to have done all these things at once.

Energy can neither be created nor destroyed; it only changes form. So WHERE DID ALL THAT ADDITIONAL DESTRUCTIVE ENERGY COME FROM?

Conclusions

In order for the towers to have collapsed "gravitationally" in the observed duration, as we've been told over and over again, one or more of the following zany-sounding conditions must have been met

* The undamaged structure below the impact zone offered zero resistance to the collapse.
* The glass and concrete spontaneously disintegrated without any expenditure of energy.
* The massive vertical steel core columns simply vanished, as if by magic.
* On 9/11 alone, in that location alone, gravity was much stronger than gravity.
* On 9/11 alone, in that location alone, energy was not conserved.

None of these laws-of-physics-violating, and thus impossible, conditions can be accounted for by the official government theory of 9/11, nor by any of the subsequent analyses and arguments designed to prop up this official myth of 9/11.

The Bottom Line

The government explanations for the WTC collapses fail the most basic conservation-of-energy reality check. Therefore the government theory is FALSE; it does not fit the observed facts, and the notion of a "pancake collapse" cannot account for what happened. The "pancake collapse" explanation is impossible, and thus absurd. It is A LIE.

It is utterly impossible for a gravitational collapse to proceed so destructively through a path of such great resistance in anywhere near free-fall time. This fact debunks the preposterous contention that theWTC collapses can be blamed solely upon damage resulting from the plane impacts.

The unnaturally short durations of the top-down collapses reveal that the towers did not disintegrate because they were coming down, but rather they came down because something else was causing them to disintegrate.

So, to the extent that people accept the ridiculous "pancake collapse" story, former CIA Director and current Secretary of Defense Gates' other premise, that people know what they saw, is also false. It is left to you to decide if his conclusion, which was based upon clearly incorrect presumptions, is also flawed.

The collapse of WTC building 7, which was NOT hit by any plane, and which also collapsed within a second of free-fall time later that same day, similarly fails the conservation-of-energy analysis. The 9/11 Commission made no attempt to explain it.

Just how and why so many highly-accredited and credentialed people all so miserably failed to check the "pancake collapse" theory, by giving it this basic physics reality check, is beyond the scope of this analysis.

SO - WHO DONE IT??

Any good detective will tell you that the way to find criminals is to investigate those that benefitted, or stood to benefit, from the crime. Surely those that were quickly blamed for this mass-murderous crime of the century - Bin Laden, etc., had evil intentions against America, but could not have done it single-handedly. Just after 9/11 Iraq and Saddam Hussein were implied as guilty in a PSYOP to justify the invasion of Iraq, when in fact they were blameless for 9/11.

Here are some that, under the criteria of the good detective above, must be considered suspects:

Bush, Cheney, and their fellow Republican/neo-conservatives then in power.
Then NYC mayor Rudy Giuliani.
WTC owner/leaseholder Larry Silverstein.
The theocratic nation of Israel.

DEMAND that congress reopen the investigation and bring the real MASS-MURDERERS to justice!

The Buildings {Fixed Objects} Were Not Moving
-hint- The Airplanes [Moving Objects}

-minor-technical-point- It's a Motion-Picture Camera that does Frames-per-Second to create the Illusion of a 'Moving' Image :
* The Buildings {Fixed Objects} have 'Persistence' from Frame-to-Frame
* The Airplanes [Moving Objects} Do Not Have 'Persistence' from Frame-to-Frame

Cuhulin,

My Daddy used to have a wooden Concrete Form 24"x24"x4" to make the Backyard Walkway 'Slabs'.
-solid-concrete-don't-recall-any-wire-or-rebar-in-them-

When he would decide to Rearrange the Backyard :
We would 'Move' the Slabs to form a new Walkway.

Moved those Slabs more than a few times over the Years 1960s~1990.

Those Slabs had a few 'Chips' around the Edges;
but none of them ever Cracked.

the old man was a great 'rearranger' ~ RHF

He's taken Babbleloonian to the next level by inventing words that almost look like English ones, but aren't quite.

eg. "oliminate" = eliminate perhaps?

"vicks salve"??? Hmmm... maybe Vicks VapoRub?

There is nothing but evidence, makes you appear just as you are, a blithering idiot ...:

http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/evidence/moltensteel.html

A /Messenger-Inquirer/ report recounts the experiences of Bronx firefighter "Toolie" O'Toole, who stated that some of the beams lifted from deep within the catacombs of Ground Zero by cranes were "dripping from the molten steel." ^4
<http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/evidence/moltensteel.html#ref4>

A transcription of an audio interview of Ground Zero chaplain Herb Trimpe contains the following passage:

When I was there, of course, the remnants of the towers were still standing. It looked like an enormous junkyard. A scrap metal yard, very similar to that. Except this was still burning. There was still fire. On the cold days, even in January, there was a noticeable difference between the temperature in the middle of the site than there was when you walked two blocks over on Broadway. You could actually feel the heat.

It took me a long time to realize it and I found myself actually one day wanting to get back. Why? Because I felt more comfortable. I realized it was actually warmer on site. The fires burned, up to 2,000 degrees, underground for quite a while before they actually got down to those areas and they cooled off.

I talked to many contractors and they said they actually saw molten metal trapped, beams had just totally had been melted because of the heat. So this was the kind of heat that was going on when those airplanes hit the upper floors. It was just demolishing heat. ^5 <http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/evidence/moltensteel.html#ref5>

A report in the /Johns Hopkins Public Health Magazine/ about recovery work in late October quotes Alison Geyh, Ph.D., as stating:

Fires are still actively burning and the smoke is very intense. In some pockets now being uncovered, they are finding molten steel. ^6 <http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/evidence/moltensteel.html#ref6> "

Well yeah! DUH!

If people never played sports, never got in a car, never got in an airplane, never got in a boat, never went swimming, never rode motorcycles/bicycles, never worked in construction or around dangerous machinery, never went scuba diving, never went horseback riding, never drank alcohol, etc. health care costs would go down ... I mean, just for one example, 48,000 Americans die in car accidents every year -- just think how many are seriously harmed for life! And, then there is golfing accidents: http://www.senior-golfers.com/golf-accidents/

Yes, if we stop those dangerous , self-endangering, actions, health costs will go down, well, maybe ...

But, if I really don't think that is going to happen ...

Facts don't convince True Believers. It is obvious that Obama can't be their president, and reality won't convince them differently.

A trouble with this scenario is - the healthier we are, the longer we will live (past the time when we're productive) - and then something will kill us just as dead. Maybe more slowly and more expensively.

So let's see, you claim they feel in their own footprints, I prove you're wrong, and your response is to change the subject.

Enough said. You have no honesty, and absolutely no interest in knowing the actual facts that have been established.

You are a damn fool. You want to pick and choose, argue one point, what

What don't you understand about straight down, into its' own footprint,

The only facts produce evidence proving the thermite, molten iron, free fall speeds, collapse into their own footprints ... that is why some posts contain evidence, and others, such as yours, contain none ...

Quite shallow!

Life on earth is the only example of itself ... at least at this present time.

Nothing in all of our view of the universe before us, earth, mars, moon, other planets, etc. would lead one to believe that life can "just happen by accident." "Spontaneous Generation", or life "just happening" was tried as a theory, long ago, although it still has its' followers, it has simply grown into a religion which would have one make a leap of faith against all logical thought and reason to believe ... end of story.

Therefore, and borne out by occams' razor, the most likely explanation is that an intelligence created us ... and the question becomes, where did that intelligence come from ... and now, we search ...

Well expecting you to be able to prove your claims about even a single particular has been shown to be pretty foolish. I mean, really, expecting you to produce actual proof?

It's real simple. If your proof is overwhelming, then I should be able to pick ANY element and it will standup to whatever scrutiny I bring upon it. Since it doesn't, then your "overwhelming proof" ceases to be proof and just becomes "overwhelming claims".

The fact that it can't, and that you then immediately attempt to change the subject, and this isn't the first time you've been corrected on this assertion means you're not really interested in the truth, but only in promoting your conspiracy theory no matter how much it's based on claims that are false.

It certainly is, or you could provide irrefutable proof of some specific element that proves your assertions have merit.

You have tried again and again and everytime your proof isn't even close to any rational notion of proof but is usually just more unsupported assertions made by someone else.

See what I mean?

I just proved to you this claim is wrong, and here you are once again spouting the same disproven assertions.

Then you wonder why people don't believe in your claims....

Oh, and once again, the proof that shows the falseness of your assertion.

2152. Monica Pignotti: UNFIT TO TEACH

Newsgroup: rec.radio.shortwave
Date: 2011-05-19 02:09:09 UTC
From: Anne Onime <anonymous@rip.ax.lt>
Message-ID: <4cb06858ec8e2113b90a4c8f897ef2da@rip.ax.lt>
Source record: 230029

Monica Pignotti has sealed her fate.

No self respecting institution will hire her. She is unfit to teach and, due to her unsavory associations, retaining her would tarnish the institution's reputation.

There will be NO compliance with the "demands" in the statement on her website.

Many of the signatories to her strident manifesto, such as Bruce Thyer, have vested interests in concealing the truth about her.

Efforts to disseminate the TRUTH about her will continue, unabated.

In addition, the institutions whose faculty members have been foolish enough to sign this document will be contacted and retractions will be demanded. If these people wish to speak out, let them speak on their own.

Some facts about Monica Pignotti:

1) She dropped out of college to join Scientology. She spent years in this crazy cult, and rose to the highest levels, containing scientifically unsound beliefs about radiation, alien warlords and the atom bombing of volcanos. While in Scientology, Monica Pignotti became romantically involved with Quentin Hubbard, one of the children of Scientology founder, L. Ron Hubbard.

2) After leaving Scientology, Monica Pignotti became a devotee of Roger Callahan and his bizarre therapies, Thought Field Therapy and Voice Technology. These systems claim to heal by tapping the body and at the most advanced levels, diagnosis is performed over the phone.

Pignotti stopped practicing Thought Field Therapy and Voice Technology and used her inside knowledge to criticize them.

A review of her CV will show that a significant number of her published papers deal with this topic. One has to ask, has she ever "debunked" anything where she lacked inside knowledge?

3) Pignotti entered academia. She was dismissed from a teaching position at Florida State University (FSU) for several reasons. First, she made obscene sexual propositions to faculty members. Second, many students complained that she wasted classroom time with anecdotes about time travel, Scientology, Roger Callahan, being single, and her addiction to caffeine. Finally, she accused a female professor of performing oral sex on a male student in a public place.

4) Monica Pignotti spent several years aligned with a fringe medical group. The head of this group, Larry W. Sarner of Loveland, CO, has bachelor's degrees in political science and mathematics, and is unqualified to evaluate psychological interventions.

Larry Sarner bilked lenders and investors out of several million dollars on a scheme to develop and deploy voting machines. Even though Pignotti, for whatever reason, has parted company with Sarner, she continues to insist that his voting machines worked.

5) Pignotti applied for a position at New York University (NYU). She did not get it. She concocted a fantastic story about how her personal information was compromised, and she demanded that NYU conduct a full investigation.

NYU refused, and has stated, publicly, that they are glad they did not hire her.

6) Pignotti considered applying for a position at Brigham Young University (BYU) which would have required adherence to the BYU honor code. Pignotti wrote a scathing blog post denouncing the Mormon faith.

7) Pignotti associates with violent criminals. As an example, Robert Clark, who uses the pseudonym henri and who has been convicted of making bomb threats against both churches and weather stations.

No need to, it is a false belief based on false conclusions ...

The 9/11 controlled demolitions were done quite well ... actually, quite amazing ... under ideal circumstances, things can go wrong. However, a successful controlled demolition leaves no doubt in expert minds ...:

His interview with Evin Fairbanks was the source and it was ABC.

Thanks for the correction ,They killed him off with cancer because of

And speaking of public servants, we must realize, Joeturn, that we are discussing with a nest of vipers. Fascists within the US government committed false flag attacks to start a war which has murdered millions. The US Capitalist blew up the Murrah Federal Building in 1996, they blew up the World Trade Center in 1993, killing 11, and injuring hundreds, our masters attacked again on Sept 11, 2001. Then the gang of Fascists attacked the Madrid Trains, the London Subway underground (Guiliani was on hand to do that one too!) The Fascists did the 7/7 attacks and blamed it on innocent Muslim youth. Today Israel is harvesting organs out of live Palestinians, and alt.atheism may have some paid traitors committing treason every time they type. Fascists have some mighty crimes to cover up. Fascists think the false flag attacks are humorous. I don't think the attacks are humorous. The war is a crime.

Does it matter what scenarios one dreams up in their minds?

I think it has always been the same rule in effect, those with the money pay the bills ... or, you can't get blood out of a turnip!

Any country only has a set amount of resources, it makes no difference if those resources are divided up amongst the many, and the many pay the bills, or only one possess all resources and pays all bills ... I mean, in the end, you just have to answer to logic and reason ...

Really? Huh?

They just look like persistent morons who repetitively repeat the same lines with the same results, but offer no concrete support of their suppositions and opinions -- one could interpret that to be insanity! I do ...

The politicians do remember whose paying their salaries. Their bosses are OPEC and they have to keep the price of oil up to appease their bosses.I can remember when OPEC created the Chernobyl incident to scare the people away from using nuclear fuel and again they directed their wether machine (HAARP) causing the earthquakes in Japan and the tsunami once again created a scare from nuclear fuel so the price of oil could dominate$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$

All your photo shows is a leaning top so maybe the next blast
countered that lean and made the builing straighten up before hitting the ground.How can you assume it didnot collapse in its own footprints,you must show every frame till the fall has stopped to say that. Scot you are very easily caught in your lies and half truths!

So why did the leaning top not pull the whole building that way it would have been easily stood back up and dusted off and back in bidnez in no time! You are almost as stupid as george!

It's a study in treachery.

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

So what's your excuse for your inability to insist on a valid trial for the most horrific crime of this millenium to date?

>kooker...

That is your best excuse.

>...Hates US

Of course you hate America when you insist that those who murder Americans should not be prosecuted
according to the rule of law.

Notice that you can't name one thing that would be admissible evidence against the scapegoat chosen
by your fascist masters.

The bushkultie has no admissible evidence, and doesn't even know what it is.

You always do.

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their
offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

"...incompetence cannot explain the suppression of efforts to prevent the attacks."

Well this is EXACTLY what happened. The very people with established motives for conducting an event like the one that took place on 9/11/2001 were responsible for national security when we had that most unlikely, unrealistic and implausible complete catastrophic failure of every single defense procedure in operation."

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Force lost fully half its planes the first day of the war. ..."

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Despite this warning, when the Japanese pilots of the 11th Air Fleet attacked Clark Field nine hours later, they caught two squadrons of B-17s lined up on the field and a number of American fighters just preparing to take off. The first wave of twenty-seven Japanese twin-engine bombers achieved complete tactical surprise and destroyed most of the American heavy bombers. A second bomber strike followed while Zero fighters strafed the field. Only three P-40s managed to take off. A simultaneous attack on Iba Field in northwest Luzon was also successful: all but two of the 3d Squadron's P-40s were destroyed. The Far East Air Force lost fully half its planes the first day of the war. ..."

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Why did Roosevelt order the pacific fleet to relocate from the west coast to Hawaii in the summer of 1940? Why was the commander, Admiral Richardson, removed after complaining that Pearl Harbor didn't offer sufficient air or topedo defense?

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

On August 8, 1945, after the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Hoover wrote to Army and Navy Journal publisher Colonel John Callan O'Laughlin, "The use of the atomic bomb, with its

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

US history to release his official birth certificate, and the other one last month. This is not even remotely open to dispute, honeylambs.

'States rights?' Isn't that the concept that the knee-jerk left cites as de facto racist?

Yup, it is...

Having to do of course with your New Deal Democrat bretheren citing 'states rights' as the reason to continue slavery, Jim Crow and segregation....

You know, Democrats like Robert KKK Byrd, Al Gore Sr, Bill Clinton's mentor William J. Fulbright and George Wallace to name just a few of the more prominent Democrats to employ the tactic...

Seems you're the racist, fuckwit (not 'raciost[sic]' btw)....even by the logic of your own fellow ideologues.

And this is not remotely in dispute

The disillusioned younger crowds have been streaming from California for

They don't realize it, but they take the problems of California to those

Nothing tells us enough to have enough information for either theory and Occums Razor needs enough information to apply it.

In this case we are short on facts for either assumption.

No one has a simple proof there is no God and no one has proof there is a God. Leaving the same fate to the spontaneous life theory....

The question is.... if life was started when the Earth was one billion years old, why hasn't it been started with new and different DNA again in the last three billion years?

If Life was started "successfully" in the last 4 billion years, how many times was it started unsuccessfully in the last 4 billion years. By that I mean that if life was started that can and did have DNA to reproduce how many times did life get started with different DNA that couldn't reproduce? If it took Billions of "life creations" to start life that could reproduce, where are the billions of failed "life" that we have never seen because they have DNA that's different and can't reproduce?

Evolution means that there are many failed and many variations in the many streams of DNA in life. Where are they?

What has the universe produced only one of? Einstein predicted that there may even be multiple universes. It seems odd that there is only one type of reproducing DNA based life all from one common start of life three billion years ago. All the elements are still here waiting to start new life(reproducing and NON-reproducing) and should be doing so each new day. Where are they?

The money came thru Al Taqua Bank, which Rove and Norquist helped set

That's because you don't understand the insidious nature of the

And, you cite what proofs?

What cites are needed? I see nothing in that statement that can really be disputed.

The healthier we are, the longer we tend to live. Eventually, we get to a point where we are unproductive, whether through a fault of our own, or because we get old enough that nobody will employ us.

Or perhaps you are questioning that we won't die anyway, even after all that health?

Me, I've been neglectful of my health my whole life... and now I'm beginning to pay for it. I'll be doing fantastic should I make it to 60. But then again... only the good die young.. <g>

Investments work. The total amount of wealth does change. Such things as education, infrastructure and health can increase the wealth production.

Because "healthy" people living to ripe old age seem to require very minimal medical care ... indeed, from two instances I am aware of, both died quietly in their sleep from "natural causes."

The pollutions, toxins and outright poisons in our environment seem to keep encroaching on "healthy" at a pretty consistent and every increasing rate ... so it is the "Maybe more slowly and more expensively." part which is in question.

Fukushima is a prime example of what is the real problem(s.) The deaths caused by this will only be an increase in cancer. This increase will be taken up and argued, obfuscated and disinformation applied until the increased deaths will only be a moot point and we await the next disaster, event, "accident", etc. which causes the next increase in death and failing of health in the populations of the world.

The costs in medical health of fukushima will be staggering on an already failing health system, and the chances of suing the Japanese or GE to recover the damages is nil ...

Perceived wealth "changes", or can be manipulated. Indeed, it is used much today. Our children and our childrens', children futures have been "mortgaged" to pay for the "wealth" we are now enjoying. At some point, they may just refuse the "indentured servitude" we have sold them into

Well, Libya had managed to escape the current financial meltdown of the world. Indeed, her oil and gold had become just too enticing!

But, you make an excellent point, the norm should be "NO DEBT." And, from all I see, we fall quite short ... a MAJOR indication of the problems we are immersed in!

This present scam of stealing wealth, concentrating it into fewer and fewer hands while balancing with more and more debt forced on the many has been going on for years and decades ... relatively few remain untouched.

Indeed, like the "frog in the pan of boiling water", many such as you have grown so used to this dilemma as to begin considering it "normal!"

No, he would not have been. The Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952 specified who would be a citizen if born abroad. If only one parent was a citizen, then that citizen needed to have been physically present in the USA for five years after the age of 14. As Obama's mother was only 18 at the time of his birth, she did not meet the requirement due to simple arithmetic. That provision applied regardless of the marital status of the parents. If the parents were not married, an additional restriction applied: the father had to "legitimate" the child by acknowledging and establishing paternity.

Sec. 309. (a) The provisions of paragraphs (3), (4), (5) and (7) of section 301 (a), and of paragraph (2) of section 308, of this title shall apply as of the date of birth to a child born out of wedlock on or after the effective date of this Act, if the paternity of such child is established while such child is under the age of twenty-one years by legitimation.

http://library.uwb.edu/guides/USimmigration/66%20stat%20163.pdf

That is an additional restriction, and does not alter the physical presence requirement of the one citizen parent. The applicability of Title III, Section 301 (a)(7) does not depend in any way on the marital status of the parents: that one citizen parent must have been physically present in the USA for 10 years, five of which were after the age of 14, in order for the child born abroad to be a citizen at birth. Nothing in the statute mentions the marital status of the parents, and there is no implicit reference to marital status. The marital status was irrelevant.

Is there some factory which is churning out "race sensitive people?"

Where are these imbeciles coming from? Is the school system suddenly training with old OJ Trial films and teaching the art of "Race Card Playing?"

Why do so many seem stuck with the false impression that shouting "racist!" is helping their argument(s?)

All I see are bizarre racist people running around and repetitiously shouting racist, and rather ineffectually at that!

Apparently you are having the same problem I am having, attempting to locate pertinent and valid data?

The biggest joke I have ever seen is the 8% unemployment figure. Then you see about 25% of the people standing around with no jobs! The local paper, here, just did their own research and found ~19% unemployment ... the govt. ~10% for the same area ... I keep finding this with most govt.
figures which would paint them in a bad light, you have to use an error correction of 2X to 3X times their figures to come close to accuracy ...
a crime in itself.

I hate to see the day when all these lies come home to visit us ...

It sure seems that all hard evidence, proof and qualified experts are having a hard time with government claims, findings, reports, etc.

What is truly amazing is the unified effort to stop anything from reaching the level of the courts ... it demonstrates a coercion/collaboration which crosses all boundries of our separation of powers protections of the Constitution! Puppet masters pulling strings ...

It's not a lie, it's the way the Unemployment Indices are calculated.
The calculation - which misses anyone who is not aplying for or collecting unemployment - is done that way because it has to be - there is no way to keep an actual record other than this statistic without becoming Big Brother. It's unfortunate but true. The net result is that is underestimates unemployment in the worst times by a factor of about 100% plus. In good times that underestimate is still there, but probably a lot less, and more people are rotating in and out of jobs instead of being semi-permanently unemployed, so the true long-term unemployment is closer to zero.

Thanks. It would be cool if either REE or his relay site QSLed - the way things are going, neither one will be around much longer - and it's been a LONG time since we've heard Faro del Caribe :-(

Yeah, but IOUs are usefull for buying thangys and putting food on the table and clothes and shoes on your kids.

I finally found it, a few minutes ago.Every since last Sunday I have been turning my old house upside down and inside out looking for it.It was in my leanto storage shed at the back of my house.What it T'is, T'is an old antique wrought iron floor stand bird cage stand, its tall, stands on the floor and has a big hoop on it and a bird cage hangs inside of the hoop.I have two old antique bird cages too.I bought that old stuff many years ago at Goodwill.My sister wants them for her flower garden, is what it T'is.

Most likely, very similar to the "new jobs created."

You never see them, you never benefit from them, you don't know anyone who has ever had one ... but to those with a religious belief, they are there!

If you click through the links supplied to the original articles in the media, you will see that the quotes used in your "source" are taken wildly out of context and in no way support the silly idea that our own government caused the destruction of the WTC on 9/11. What is really being questioned is whether the government could have better used what intelligence they had to prevent the attack on the TWC by an outside terrorist agency.
> The second link is the usual "you can't dismiss these people" claim, which then goes on to include mostly people who have either no expertise an certainly no direct knowledge of the events on 9/11. Of course, this page has nothing but self reinforcing links to similar sites, but no links to anything outside. Why am I not surprised? Please tell me why these sites never concern themselves with the statistical probability of "radical thinkers", as you call them, or "kooks" as others might call them, in every occupational field? The fact that a few (1400, I believe) of all the "architects and engineers" (assuming those who signed are architects or engineers in other than their own minds - did anyone actually vet the list?) think like you do, shouldn't be too surprising (troubling perhaps, but not surprising) in our diverse society.
> And as has become usual with JS, the third link has nothing to do with 9/11 at all. It's the usual, when pressed to provide some support for issue A, bring up issue B nonsense. Yes, issue A and issue B may be real issues, but if they have nothing to do with each other, then they don't supply any support for your position, JS. How many times in your 9/11 threads, JS, have you turned the discussion to "the birth certificate isn't real"?

> Now, I predict that JS will simply ignore my criticisms. He will not do as I suggested and actually read his own references in detail, nor will he provide any cogent counters to any of my points. I predict he will simply continue to post the same set of links (like he did with his original 9/11 list) despite the fact I poked them full of holes. Heck, he may even "plonk" me again. If he hasn't learned any restraint, he may even gasp call me names again, as if that somehow proves his point.

I think EVERYONE would be in agreement!

Since taxes MUST be passed on to those buying products or services, we should just levy ALL taxes on the consumers, US! It is a sham, a fraud and a deception to try and fool morons that any but CONSUMERS pay the taxes.

This would provide a level playing field for all business ... let's do it!

A flat tax on every taxable dollar ... end of story ... end of

If you click through the links supplied to the original articles in the media, you will see that the quotes used in your "source" are taken wildly out of context and in no way support the silly idea that our own government caused the destruction of the WTC on 9/11. What is really being questioned is whether the government could have better used what intelligence they had to prevent the attack on the TWC by an outside terrorist agency.
> > The second link is the usual "you can't dismiss these people" claim, which then goes on to include mostly people who have either no expertise an certainly no direct knowledge of the events on 9/11. Of course, this page has nothing but self reinforcing links to similar sites, but no links to anything outside. Why am I not surprised? Please tell me why these sites never concern themselves with the statistical probability of "radical thinkers", as you call them, or "kooks" as others might call them, in every occupational field? The fact that a few (1400, I believe) of all the "architects and engineers" (assuming those who signed are architects or engineers in other than their own minds - did anyone actually vet the list?) think like you do, shouldn't be too surprising (troubling perhaps, but not surprising) in our diverse society.

> > And as has become usual with JS, the third link has nothing to do with 9/11 at all. It's the usual, when pressed to provide some support for issue A, bring up issue B nonsense. Yes, issue A and issue B may be real issues, but if they have nothing to do with each other, then they don't supply any support for your position, JS. How many times in your 9/11 threads, JS, have you turned the discussion to "the birth certificate isn't real"? I've certainly lost count.
> > Now, I predict that JS will simply ignore my criticisms. He will not do as I suggested and actually read his own references in detail, nor will he provide any cogent counters to any of my points. I predict he will simply continue to post the same set of links (like he did with his original 9/11 list) despite the fact I poked them full of holes. Heck, he may even "plonk" me again. If he hasn't learned any restraint, he may even gasp call me names again, as if that somehow proves his point.

Frankly, new jobs are not created until there is a demand for the product or the service. When the general public has no money or is paranoid about where their next meal is coming from, the demand drops precipitously. A vicious cycle with few options to prevent stagnation.

No crimes of obamas' should be ignored, they are all important ... the 9/11 crimes go wanting for justice, making obama as guilty of them as bush, and in need of impeachment. Impeach obama and then bring him to trial right along side of bush.

As always, an ADEQUATE INVESTIGATION of 9/11 needs done, then we bring the guilty parties to justice.

ALL of the links I posted have to do with that, the moron questioned the first, which contained this, "

The bipartisan Sept. 11 commission has issued subpoenas to the Defense Department and the Federal Aviation Administration for materials related to air defenses on the day of the attacks.

But the commission balked at a proposal by Roemer last week to subpoena the presidential documents, which include an Aug. 6, 2001, briefing outlining a variety of possible attacks by the Al Qaeda network. Thomas Kean, the commission chairman, a Republican, and former New Jersey governor, had warned two weeks earlier that the panel was considering subpoenas targeting the White House.

Kristen Breitweiser, whose husband was killed at the World Trade Center, assailed the commission yesterday for refusing to provide details of its deal."

I just don't know how to answer questions which don't even pose themselves in sanity!

This is indeed disappointing. I met Allen Graham a few years ago while he was briefly on leave here in the US. Great guy, sorry to hear his show being cancelled but I guess it was inevitable with the SWL hobby being in apparent decline.

Seems to be a painful spiral, too... First, you have a bit fewer listeners in the developed countries. So the broadcasters cut back on feeds to those areas. Less to listen to, so fewer listeners, and so on. <sigh>

Well expecting you to be able to prove your claims about even a single particular has been shown to be pretty foolish. I mean, really, expecting
you to produce actual proof?

> You want to pick and choose, argue one point, what don't you understand > about "OVERWHELMING PROOF."

It's real simple. If your proof is overwhelming, then I should be able to pick ANY element and it will standup to whatever scrutiny I bring upon it.
Since it doesn't, then your "overwhelming proof" ceases to be proof and just becomes "overwhelming claims".

The fact that it can't, and that you then immediately attempt to change the subject, and this isn't the first time you've been corrected on this assertion means you're not really interested in the truth, but only in promoting your conspiracy theory no matter how much it's based on claims that are false.

It certainly is, or you could provide irrefutable proof of some specific element that proves your assertions have merit.

You have tried again and again and everytime your proof isn't even close to any rational notion of proof but is usually just more unsupported assertions made by someone else.

See what I mean?

I just proved to you this claim is wrong, and here you are once again spouting the same disproven assertions.

Then you wonder why people don't believe in your claims....

Oh, and once again, the proof that shows the falseness of your assertion.

ROFLOL

Yep, that is what I expected ... nothing ... even less than nothing.

I make no claims ... I listen to experts and evidence, I look at facts ...

You do personal attacks and have no evidence to offer ... I mean, it is like DUH -- you are a moron ...

... but, here you go again ... ROFLOL

JS

I get it, you are attempting to drive everyone in the NGs insane with your insane rants ... OK, carry on, we will see if it works.
Personally, I don't think it has a chance ...

No, just shows a less than perfect controlled demolition, accidents are just proof that accidents can happen, get it through your head ...

I get it, you are attempting to drive everyone in the NGs insane with your insane rants ... OK, carry on, we will see if it works.
Personally, I don't think it has a chance ...

No need to, it is a false belief based on false conclusions ...

The 9/11 controlled demolitions were done quite well ... actually, quite amazing ... under ideal circumstances, things can go wrong. However, a successful controlled demolition leaves no doubt in expert minds ...:

Well, then, Johnny KQQK, it shouldn't be so danged hard for you to NAME ONE THING, should it. Yet you consistently FAIL. Why is that?

The politicians do remember whose paying their salaries. Their bosses are OPEC and they have to keep the price of oil up to appease their bosses.I can remember when OPEC created the Chernobyl incident to scare the people away from using nuclear fuel and again they directed their wether machine (HAARP) causing the earthquakes in Japan and the tsunami once again created a scare from nuclear fuel so the price of oil could dominate$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$

All your photo shows is a leaning top so maybe the next blast
countered that lean and made the builing straighten up before hitting the ground.How can you assume it didnot collapse in its own footprints,you must show every frame till the fall has stopped to say that. Scot you are very easily caught in your lies and half truths!

So why did the leaning top not pull the whole building that way it would have been easily stood back up and dusted off and back in bidnez

It's a study in treachery.

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind every occasion its enemies attack it.

"I would like to assure the world that I did not plan the recent attacks,
which seems to have been planned by people for personal reasons," bin Laden's statement said."

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and
disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-v...

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

You do have problems.

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

>...cannot NAME ONE...

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

So what's your excuse for your inability to insist on a valid trial for the most horrific crime of this millenium to date?

>kooker...

That is your best excuse.

>...Hates US

Of course you hate America when you insist that those who murder Americans should not be prosecuted
according to the rule of law.

Notice that you can't name one thing that would be admissible evidence against the scapegoat chosen
by your fascist masters.

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence

The bushkultie has no admissible evidence, and doesn't even know what it is.

You always do.

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer
assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their
offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

"...incompetence cannot explain the suppression of efforts to prevent the attacks."

Nobody had the means/motive/opportunity of Bush and Cheney.

You do have problems. That was already obvious.

The bushkultie has to pretend this never happened, too:

"Osama bin Laden, the man the United States considers the prime suspect in last week's terrorist attacks on New York and Washington, denied any role"

http://articles.cnn.com/2001-09-16/us/inv.binladen.denial_1_bin-laden...

The bushkultie hasn't contacted CNN to demand a retraction.

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

NINE-ELEVEN - NEVER AGAIN!

To understand the point I wish to make, let's assume that an obviously alien creature was walking peacefully down the street, and observe peoples' reactions to it.

Some would simply not see it! Their brains would reject as IMPOSSIBLE what their eyes tell them, and block out their awareness of the unearthly creature.

Some might stare, perhaps be shocked or frightened, but then go on, rationalizing that they only saw someone in costume, or that they had indulged too heavily at last night's party and were seeing things. They would tell no one what they saw for fear of being called crazy. They would even, in defense of their own rationalization, label other people that reported such a sighting crazy. This is the psychological phenomenon of DENIAL.

Perhaps in fear for their own sanity, deniers condemn as crazy others that claim aliens or whatever to be real. Such assertions are frightening because they violate their sense of reality - "only KOOKS believe in aliens!" Thus people tend to reject as unreal what is not comfortable for them to accept, and likewise embrace beliefs that do not hold up to scientific scrutiny but do provide them comfort. You don't believe what you DON'T WANT to believe; denial thus serves to protect the mind from what would be mentally traumatic if accepted.

Some things are simply too horrific, too abominably appalling, too greatly in violation of what we WANT to think or believe, to accept as actual reality - even when they ARE real! "Look; the Emperor wears no clothes," said the child too na&#65533;ve to know that such facts are not to be spoken of, nor even acknowledged to oneself.

PSYOPS - definition paraphrased from Wikipedia: Psychological Operations. Techniques used to influence a target audience's value systems, beliefs, emotions, motives, reasoning, or behavior. PSYOPS are used to induce confessions or reinforce attitudes and behaviors favorable to the originator's objectives, and are sometimes combined with black operations or false flag tactics. The phrase is commonly used by governments who wish to avoid the terms propaganda and brainwashing in reference to their own work because those terms have negative connotations. The use of such euphemisms for what is in effect mind control is itself an example of psychological operations, i.e. using psychological techniques to persuade a large number of people to support something they wouldn't normally support or to unquestioningly accept lies.

Obviously, to permit or commit an atrocity on the scale of the 9/11 attacks, and/or to exploit the horror, shock, and fear thus created to influence public opinion and actions, is clearly a PSYOP. The exploitation of the psychological phenomenon of DENIAL is also clearly a PSYOP. Who would want to believe that traitors in our own government would permit, or even perpetrate, such an atrocity on their own people? How much easier it would be to accept the existence of aliens - or fanatical Jihadists!

"But, after all, it is the leaders of the country who determine the policy and it is always a simple matter to drag the people along, whether it is a democracy, or a fascist dictatorship, or a parliament, or a communist dictatorship. Voice or no voice, the people can always be brought to the bidding of the leaders. That is easy. All you have to do is tell them they are being attacked and then denounce the peacemakers for lack of patriotism and exposing the country to danger. It works the same in any country." - Hermann Goering at the Nuremberg Trials.

Now that we understand what PSYOPS are, and the psychological phenomenon of DENIAL, we are in a better position to rationally investigate the true nature and possible sources of the 9/11 attacks.

The UNDENIABLE EVIDENCE of an INSIDE JOB:

BLOWN TO BITS:

The sudden, complete, straight down at near free fall speed collapse of steel framed WTC building 7, which was not touched by the planes, is the SMOKING GUN of the 9/11 conspiracy. The building's minor fires and debris damage could not account for this collapse, which had all the earmarks of controlled demolition by explosives. Videos clearly show this. Such demolitions take many days or weeks to set up - not the few hours between the attacks and the collapse. The explosives therefore had to be put in place BEFOREHAND. This lends credibility to the use of previously placed explosives to bring down the towers as well, which like the badly damaged and fire-gutted Deutchbank building would probably have remained standing.

Propaganda shills, disinformationists, and those in psychological denial still insist the collapse of WTC 7 could not be what it obviously was, and they employ often ludicrous rationalizations and fabrications, elaborate lies, and infantile ad-hominem attacks to defend their indefensible position. The REAL terrorists are desperate to cover up their mass-murderous crime of the century - the permitting if not perpetration of, and subsequent political and economic exploitation of the fully preventable 9/11 disaster. Could Bin Laden have somehow totally incapacitated NORAD - the world's most sophisticated aerospace defense system - on that horrible morning? I don't think so!

There is evidence of an INSIDE JOB even more clear and indisputable than the explosive demolition collapse of building 7 and the standing down of NORAD. Many very small HUMAN BODY FRAGMENTS have been found on the roofs of nearby buildings. These were too far away to be from jumpers from the towers. If the towers simply collapsed from damage and fire alone, what blew these bodies to smithereens and sent the fragments flying for considerable distances? The plane impacts did not have the explosive brisance (shattering force) necessary to do this - only HIGH EXPLOSIVES can blow bodies to tiny bits and throw them such distances.
